DOGS FOR USE IN WAR

HOW THEY ARE TRAINED IN A LITTLE TOWN IN AUSTRIA.

The Intelligence They Display Is Simply Marvelous—How They Hunt Out and Succor the Wounded and Lost—Scenting an Enemy When Five Miles Away.

Some 50 miles west of Vienna the little market town of Wels nestles in the foothills of the Austrian Alps, which here rise in bold cliffs from the banks of the Traun.

The forests of the neighborhood are too open to harbor much game, but a stranger stopping at the summer hotel of the little town might easily be led to believe that the citizens must be the most indefatigable hunters of the Austro-Hungarian empire. From morning till night, and sometimes till long after dark, he may hear the echo of shots and the barking and howling of dogs approaching the town or dying away in the distant hills, and occasionally answered from far and near, as if all the sportsmen of the northern Alps had met in convention.

For this is one of the stations where Kriegshunde—war dogs—are trained.

The plan of training dogs for military purposes was first adopted by the French garrisons in Algiers, but has since been tried with great success in Prussia, Italy and especially in Austria, where four footed messengers have for many years been taught to carry letters to the snow bound villages of the Alpine highlands. The shaggy collies used for that purpose make the best war dogs and can be trained to race in a bee line to the next military post and announce their arrival by a peculiar bark that is at once recognized and answered by the shout of a sentry.

They will also range a long chain of hills in quest of wounded soldiers, and either dash back to report their discoveries or stand guard at the side of the cripple till an ambulance party comes near enough to be signaled by a long drawn howl.

Trainers send out three or four of their shaggy pupils at once and ascertain their proficiency by all sorts of ingenious tests. Soldiers instructed to act the part of helpless cripples will hide in thickets or caverns and keep still till the dog tugs at their sleeves, when they will sit up and reward his sagacity with a piece of sausage.

They then try to rise, but pretend to be too weak to walk or even to shoot, and ask the dog to call for assistance. If help is near, Collie will set up a loud howl, repeated at shorter and shorter intervals, till the signal is answered from the valley below. If his appeals should remain unheeded, he will mount the next rock and look about as if to impress the lay of the land on his mind, and then dash off to summon help from headquarters.

Should two cripples intimate their need of aid at the same time, Collie will guide the rescuing party to the hiding place of the one farthest away, and help them to pick up or somehow assist the the other man on their way home.

Messenger dogs carry letters in a small bag wrapped around their collar and will permit only the proper officials to touch that collar. A noncommissioned officer, displaying the insignia of his rank, may venture to remove the bag, but the dog will follow him and see to it that he gets him an answer.

Private soldiers are "stood off" with a menacing growl. Persons wearing the uniform of the enemy cannot stop the messenger with anything but an extremely well aimed shot. Dogs racing along the battle front will dodge bullets by running zigzag and develop a marvelous talent for taking advantage of every cover, running through the highest grass or along the safe side of rocks and fallen trees.

Picket post dogs are selected from a different breed. The half shepherd, half wolf dogs that carry letters and hunt up cripples are not entirely devoid of scent and can find their way back home in a manner not wholly explicable on the theory of keen eyesight. But for efficiency in the role of sentries they yield the palm to a species of deerhounds that do their best work after dark.

On picket duty a well trained sentinel of that breed will scent the approach of a troop of cavalry before a man, with his ear on the ground, can hear the trampling of the horses. The dog sentry will announce his discovery in a more discreet way than the Scotch widow who screamed through the citadel of Lucknow when her "inner ear" heard the approaching bagpipe of the McGregors. Phylax on scenting danger will step up close to his uniformed companion, and after a pause of silence and keen attention will announce his suspicion by low growls, getting more frequent rather than louder, as the cause for alarm becomes more unmistakable.

The best dogs of that breed have "challenged" cavalry from a distance of three to five miles, according to the direction of the wind, and infantry from nearly two miles. They can be trained to announce the approach of a known friend in a quite different way—viz, by leaping to and fro or crouching down and jumping up by turns, but without the warning growl of the danger signal.—F. L. Oswald in Youth's Companion.

The Goliath of Big Basin.

In Big Basin, Santa Cruz county, Cal., there are thousands of giant redwoods that will measure from 10 to 23 feet in diameter. But the Titan of them all is a giant known far and near as "the Goliath of Big Basin." This monstrous vegetable growth is 23 feet in diameter at the ground and is perfectly solid, a fact noted as a rarity in these colossi of the forest. Goliath is a fraction over 200 feet in height, the lower 100 feet of the trunk being free from branches or unsightly excrescences. Experienced woodmen declare that the tree would weigh more than 100,000 tons and that it would "cut" 1,500,000 feet of clear board measure lumber, besides 100 cords of wood that could be gotten out of the limbs and waste.—St. Louis Republic.

TRIED TO BREAK RECORDS.

A Toboggan Slide That Will Likely Prove Fatal to Three.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—A special to The Sun from Colorado Springs, Colo., says: Richard Woods, a Manitowoc driver, and two other men, tried to break all previous records of speed in descending Pikes Peak, on a contrivance called a toboggan by the railroad men. This consists of a flat board nailed over a groove which fits closely on the rack rail of the cog road. Below 50 feet there is a sharp turn at the top of Son-of-a-Gun hill, the steepest point in the whole road. Here the brake must have become useless, for the toboggan with its human freight, shot down the incline beyond all control. At the first slight turn the frail board jumped from the rails, leaping into the air for a fearful distance and throwing the three men away out over the mountain side. None of the men struck the earth within 60 feet of the track, and one of them, Wood, landed fully 75 feet away.

The surface there is entirely rough, broken rock, with jagged edges. The men struck on this, being terribly cut and bruised. All three may die.

Even With the Lightning Rod Men.

A gang of lightning rod sharks made an attempt to rod a farmer's house against his will Saturday, but got the worst of the bargain. The farmer is an old soldier, living 10 miles south of this city, named John Snyder. On Thursday one man called and inquired who the owner was, got a drink of water and departed. The next day another called and proposed to make the farmer a present of 100 feet of rod, charging him 75 cents a foot for 10 feet and charging him extra for the necessary points, insisting that the farmer sign a contract for the balance. This he refused to do, and the fellow left. Saturday two more men drove up to his place, threw out rods and tools and proceeded to put up the rods. The farmer objected, but they claimed to have an order to do the work and laughed him to scorn. Snyder got his gun, and covering the man in the wagon, who had drawn a revolver, he ordered him to clear out or he would let daylight through him. The fellow drove off at a lively rate, leaving his pal at the mercy of the farmer, who served him in like manner, and now the farmer has 40 feet of lightning rods to sell.—Warsaw (Ills.) Cor. St. Louis Republic.

Love For the Zigzag.

The straight line is an abomination to the Chinese. They endeavor to avoid it in their streets and buildings and have banished it completely where country field paths are concerned. They will always substitute a curve whenever possible, or they will torture it into a zigzag.

In districts not devastated by the Tai Pings nor subject to the influence of the foreigner, the houses and temples are characterized by curved, often peaked, roofs, ornamented with fantastic modifications of the "myriad stroke pattern." The inhabitants of such regions are soon found to have a mental world to correspond. The straight line is scouted. They think in curves and zigzags. To the Chinese mind the straight line is suggestive of death and demons. It belongs not to the heaven above nor to the earth beneath. In a true horizon line are seen the "undulations of the dragon." Therefore, argue the Chinese, the straight line pertains to hades.—Contemporary Review.

Hope Without Faith.

"Oh, doctor, I have sent for you, certainly; still I must confess I have not the slightest faith in modern medical science."

"Oh, that doesn't matter in the least. You see, a mule has no faith in the veterinary surgeon, and yet he cures him all the same."—Tagliche Rundschau.

Mrs. Southworth's Home.

Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth, who is now nearly 74 years old, loves Washington, her home, better than any place on earth. One would hardly believe that her cottage contained 14 rooms, all endeared to her by long and eventful associations, but best of all she loves her study, where she can watch the grand old Potomac with its high banks and picturesque, changing views. She seldom writes now, but instead reads, and her favorite books are the lives of Christ, and the comparisons she makes of the various histories of his life. Prospect cottage remains unchanged, for Mrs. Southworth, save for the needed repairs from year to year, keeps intact the features of her old home. Recently one of the grand old trees near the veranda was blown down, and this and the destruction of a natural flower garden on the steep hillside have caused Mrs. Southworth to mourn as for some old friends.—Washington Correspondent.

Bullet Waves.

One of the interesting results of the recent experiments in England in photographing flying bullets has been to show that the disturbance in the air travels faster than the bullet itself.

The photographs exhibit air waves in advance of the bullets, even when the latter are moving faster than the velocity of sound.

In one case where the bullet was moving considerably faster than sound travels in the air it was preceded by an atmospheric disturbance which, at the moment the photograph was taken, was half an inch in advance of the point of the bullet. Even when the bullets were traveling four times as fast as sound the atmospheric disturbance kept ahead of them.—Youth's Companion.

A Reminder of Cold Weather.

The first installment of children's sleds and possibly the only one to be made this season by the Maine Manufacturing company at Fairfield is now being decorated and made ready for the market. They say that last year they made about 47,000 of these sleds, and this year the output will be less than 6,000.—Bangor Commercial.

GREELEY AND RAYMOND.

A Philosophical Dissertation on the Merits of the Two Great Editors.

There is not a paper in all this country that possesses the individuality that characterized the New York Tribune when Horace Greeley was its editor or The Times when edited by Henry J. Raymond.—Kansas Commoner.

The day of great newspapers, edited by great editors, such as Horace Greeley and Henry J. Raymond, has passed away.—Chicago Tribune.

We had the pleasure of knowing both Greeley and Raymond. We were more intimate with the first named of these contemporary editors than with the other. They were able, sincere, energetic, public spirited Americans. Neither of them was a cherub. Mr. Greeley, good man! said "damn" more than once as we regret to remember, and when he called Raymond "the little villain" that cool headed man retorted in language which many people have forgotten. The two did not get along very well together when one was editor of The Tribune and the other among his assistants, nor afterward when they were editors of rival papers, though both were of the same party. Neither of them was an "ideal editor," or a very deep thinker, or a first class statesman or a notable scholar.

Greeley was a stronger and more stirring writer than Raymond, but Raymond was a far more skillful editor than Greeley. Greeley was more fervent in mind than Raymond; Raymond was more judicious and nimble than Greeley. Raymond, when he was a member of the legislature, and the speaker of the assembly, and the lieutenant governor of the state, and a member of congress, and a delegate to state or national conventions, gave evidence that he was greatly more ingenious in politics than Greeley, who, indeed, during the brief period of his service in congress, did not win distinction. Raymond always kept up a close intimacy with those astute political managers, Thurlow Weed and William H. Seward, while Greeley was unable to stay long in the "political firm of Seward, Weed & Greeley," in which, as he said when he left the concern, he had been a "junior partner."

Greeley was more of a philosopher than Raymond, who, in turn, was more of a man of affairs than Greeley. Greeley was often compared with Benjamin Franklin, though he did not possess Franklin's scientific quality; Raymond might be compared, in many respects, with Franklin Pierce, though he was not of Pierce's politics. Greeley had certain eccentricities of manner and action; Raymond was always regarded as a very level headed man. Both of them belonged to the antislavery school in politics; but Greeley's fervor in the cause far surpassed Raymond's. Greeley had in his earlier years been a champion of "social reforms" which were bitterly denounced by Raymond, who, however, in the latter years of his life, began to look with favor upon certain theories of socialism. Greeley was negligent in his dress; Raymond was natty. Both Greeley and Raymond were founders of New York daily papers which still exist, but neither of which is now characterized by the traits of its founder.

We agree with The Kansas Commoner that none of the New York papers now possesses the individuality of Greeley's Tribune or Raymond's Times, and no one of them can possess it, for both of these memorable individuals long ago departed for "the undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns" after it had been their lot "to grunt and sweat under a weary life," but that is not a reason why we should despair of the American press. We may yet have editors not unworthy to be compared with the greatest and best we have ever had.

A true man was Horace Greeley, strong, earnest and good—honored be his memory! An able man was Henry Jarvis Raymond—clear headed, quick witted, reasonable, temperate, genial and highly accomplished—let his name shine in the editorial galaxy!—New York Sun.

Maria Pettini.

Italian critics think that they have among them a young singer who is to create a great sensation. Her name is Maria Pettini, and her only instructor has been her mother, who has been a singer of some distinction. Recently the Roman Academy of St. Cecilia offered a diploma of merit, and Signorina Pettini entered the competition. The audience before whom she sang was the most critical one Rome could show, but her hearers were so delighted that, contrary to their usual custom, they applauded loudly. The diploma was awarded to her without one dissenting voice.—Rome Correspondent.

Mrs. Gage's Hope.

Mrs. Matilda Joslyn Gage, who is the representative of the Woman Suffrage party for the state of New York, is an older worker in the cause than Susan B. Anthony. She told the New York City league the other evening that Miss Anthony was not favorably impressed with the idea of woman suffrage at first. Mrs. Gage bases a hope for general interest in the work upon this fact, for she says, "If Susan could change so decidedly, I don't see why other people may not."

Orders For Women.

A curious fact is brought to light by the Manchester Guardian in connection with the reception of the Order of St. Isabella of Portugal by Mme. Carnot. The order is reserved exclusively for women, and in the bestowal of its insignia the acquiescence of the queen as well as of the king of Portugal is required. It is therefore the daughter of the Comte de Paris who has conferred this distinction upon the wife of the president of the French republic. Prussia, Russia, Austria, the German empire and Bavaria all have orders specially reserved for women who distinguish themselves.—London Queen.

PULPIT AND PEW.

There are 1,289,728 negroes who are members of the Methodist church in this country.

It is reported that a new church, called the American Methodist church, is about to be organized by some white and colored ministers in the south.

Bishop Tucker of Uganda ordained seven men to the ministry recently, two of whom are the greatest chiefs in the country and govern great provinces.

The Rev. Charles Houston opened a ball in Wolverine, Mich., recently, with a prayer in which he asked that none might be led away in their hours of amusement.

Sam Jones has been dropped as a member of the North Georgia conference. A pastorate in the conference is worth only $1,000 a year. Sam is making a great deal more than that on the road.

The Rev. Mr. White of Brooklyn, known to fame as the "marrying minister," who never turned away a loving couple, is dead. In his life he made 14,000 people more or less happy, as he claimed that none of those whom he united ever returned to revile him.

Bought Him When a Savage.

"Here is the best investment I ever made in my life," said C. Gentile as he took the extended hand of a stalwart young man with the features of the American Indian and introduced the gentleman as Dr. Carlos Montezuma. "One would not think I bought the doctor for $30. He was but five years of age then. It was in the summer of 1871. I was prospecting in Arizona, taking photographs of Indians and Aztec ruins and gathering curiosities. One day a band of Pimo Indians came into my den with this handsome fellow there, but he was not handsome then. He was painted in glaring colors, with rows of beads around his neck. I took a fancy to him as a genuine live curiosity. The Pimos wanted $30 for him. I tried to beat them down, but they insisted upon their price, and I gave it. The little chap cried for a day or two, thinking I was going to kill him, and he laughs now when he explains that he took me for the devil."

Dr. Montezuma is in the government service and is now on his way from the Colville reservation of Washington to the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., where he will enter upon the duties of school physician. The doctor was partly educated in Chicago in the public schools, where he spent five years, and later took the course in the Chicago Medical college, entering the Indian service of the government after his graduation. He says his life will be dedicated to the service of the Indians, and he will never be perfectly satisfied until the government properly educates the young of his people.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Turkish Priest In the Toils.

In the Turkish village on Midway plaisance there is a muezzin named Drenar Effendi, a priest, very zealous in the performance of his religious duties. Yesterday afternoon he was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct and given a ride in the patrol wagon to Woodlawn station.

The trouble arose from a growing disposition on the part of the Turks to treat the duties of their religion with indifference. When Drenar Effendi called the Turks to prayer yesterday afternoon they did not respond with what seemed to him a proper amount of alacrity, and incensed at their slowness he seized a club and began to beat them over the head. This attracted a large crowd at once, and a guard arrested the priest. By the time he reached the station the Turks began to be very much frightened at the thought of their priest's being locked up like a common criminal in a Christian jail, so a delegation was sent over to Woodlawn to bail him out in time for the sunset service, attendance upon which was secured by moral suasion instead of a club.—Chicago News-Record.

Prince of Detectives.

Vidocq, the great French detective, was born in Arras in 1775. He began life as a baker and early became the terror of his companions by his athletic frame and violent disposition. At the same time he was a notorious thief, and after many disgraceful adventures he enlisted in the army. In 1796 he returned to Paris with some money, which, however, he soon squandered. Next he was sentenced at Lille to eight years' hard labor for forgery, but repeatedly escaped, and in 1808 he became connected with the Paris police as a detective.

His previous career enabled him to render important services, and he was appointed chief of the safety brigade, chiefly composed of reprieved convicts, which purged Paris of the many dangerous classes. In 1818 he received a full pardon, and his connection with this service lasted until about 1828, when he settled at St. Mande as a paper manufacturer. Soon after the revolution of 1830 he became a political detective, but with little success. In 1848 he was again employed under the republican government, but he died penniless in 1857.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Cinderella and Her Slipper.

Yes, I know you are saying to yourself, "That headline would have looked and sounded better had it been 'Cinderella and the Glass Slipper,'" but the writer has been making a critical study of this most interesting nursery story and finds that the famous "glass" slipper properly has no place in it. The "glass" slipper is really the "fur," "cloth" or "felt" slipper, the word "glass" having been substituted through a strange mistranslation of the story. In the original it was written pantoufle en vair, which, being translated, would be "the fur slipper." The translator, however, wrote it as if it had been pantoufle en verre, making the "little cinder girl's" fur foot covering one of glass, which, it must be admitted, would be one quite appropriate to a fairy.—St. Louis Republic.

Racing at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 27.—The Madison track will be opened Thanksgiving day. A syndicate composed of local horsemen closed a contract for a six months' rental of the track and will take possession immediately.

Street Cars Run by Natural Gas.

The cars are of the ordinary size, but are constructed entirely of natural gas pipes, ranging in size from six inches down. These hollow tubes are neatly carved, so that to the average observer the fact that they are built of such material is not noticed. These pipes are heavily charged with gas, and with the aid of a boiler and the engines at work beneath the floor it is said a run of 30 miles can be made without refilling the tubes. A speed can be obtained equal to that of cars run by the electric method. It said that one of the latter will cost $6,000 for its construction, while a gas car can be made for $2,000. Either artificial or natural gas can be used as the propelling power. It is further asserted by its inventor that to operate it a day of 12 hours will cost but $1.14, while the expense of running an electric car for the same period will be $6.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The Stupid Husband of a Noted Singer.

Catalani's husband, a handsome Frenchman, was even more unintellectual than his wife—he was stupid. Once, having found the pitch of the piano too high, she said after the rehearsal to her husband: "The piano is too high. Will you see that it is made lower before the concert?"

When the evening came, Catalani was annoyed to find that the piano had not been altered. Her husband sent for the carpenter, who declared that he had sawed off two inches from each leg, as he had been ordered to do. "Surely it can't be too high now, my dear!" said the stupid husband soothingly.—Youth's Companion.

The City and the Country Dude.

A city dude seldom does anything worth chronicling, for he is universally regarded as empty headed, incapable of even arousing genuine curiosity. But a country dude—well, he is pretty certain to be interesting. Here is a specimen: A Buckfield young man recently tried to lift his carriage out of the mud while standing on the axle to save soiling his shoes.—Bar Harbor Record.

Why Children Are Always Doing Things.

Temptation, which is continual in children because everything is new to them, is nothing else than the force of an idea and the motive impulse that accompanies it.—Alfred Fouillee in Popular Science Monthly.

A curious box was recently found amid the ruins of Pompeii. The box was marble or alabaster, about 2 inches square and closely sealed. When opened, it was found to be full of pomatum or grease, hard, but very fragrant. The smell resembled somewhat that of the roses, but was much more fragrant.

American pioneers were God fearing and Bible loving. They staked out town lots in 22 Bethels, 10 Jordans, 9 Jerichos, 14 Bethlehems, 22 Goshens, 21 Shilohs, 11 Carmels, 18 Tabors and Mount Tabors, 22 Zions and Mount Zions, 26 Edens, 30 Lebanons, 26 Hebrews and 36 Sharons.

A Liverpool policeman, who, as he thought, swallowed a sixpence 18 years ago, recently had a severe pain in his throat. A fit of coughing came on, and the long lost coin, half of its original thickness, was released from his throat.

There is an unknown quantity of silver in the bay of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil—a silver mine, in fact, of, comparatively speaking, unlimited dimensions, and every ship that drops anchor there cuts into the bed of ore.—Exchange.

At Redditch, England, 20,000 people make more than 100,000,000 needles a year, and they are made and exported so cheaply that England has no rival and practically monopolizes the trade.

thing to say to us. "All men may die, but I shall live," is the dream of heedlessness. "All men must die, and therefore I," is the fact that is to be recognized and prepared for.

But we can become indifferent even to this "last enemy." It is not the glum indifference of desperate despair, but the cheerful indifference of perfect faith. If we have no place to go to, it is hard to contemplate our exit. But if there is a better place, a residence in which will be added happiness, we may even shake hands with Death, tell him that our latchstring is always out and he will be welcome whenever he sees fit to come. It is the fear of taking a leap in the dark that bids us pause. But if we are sure of taking a leap into the light we can easily let go our hold on this rugged life and drop into the life to come. The sea may rage as it pleases if our next port of entry is heaven, and lurking accidents and diseases may come out of their hiding places into the open, for at the worst they can only do us a good turn by opening the door of a larger and better house to live in.—New York Herald.

The tortoise is not an animal one would naturally fix upon as likely to be afraid of rain, but it is singularly so. Twenty-four hours or more before rain falls the Galapagos tortoise makes for some convenient shelter. On a bright clear morning, when not a cloud is to be seen, the denizens of a tortoise farm on the African coast may be seen sometimes heading for the nearest overhanging rocks. When that happens, the proprietor knows that rain will come down during the day, and as a rule it comes down in torrents. The sign never fails. This presensation, to coin a word, which exists in many birds and beasts may be explained partly from the increasing weight of the atmosphere when rain is forming, partly by habits of living and partly from the need of moisture which is shared by all. The American catbird gives warning of an approaching thunderstorm by sitting on the low branches of the dogwood tree (whether this union of the feline with the canine is invariable the deponent sayeth not), uttering curious notes. Other birds, including the familiar robin, it is said, give similar evidence of an impending change in the weather.—Chicago Herald.

THE ROAD TO SUCCESS.

Be generous. Meanness makes enemies and breeds distrust.

Be polite. Every smile, every genteel bow is money in your pocket.

Be independent. Do not lean on others to do your thinking or to conquer your difficulties.

Trust to nothing but God and hard work. Inscribe on your banner, "Luck is a fool; pluck is a hero."

Spend less than you earn. Do not run in debt. Watch the little leaks, and you can live on your salary.

Make all the money you can honestly, do all the good you can with it while you live, and be your own executor.

Be punctual. Keep your appointments. Be there a minute before time if you have to lose your dinner to do it.

Be conscientious in the discharge of every duty. Do your work thoroughly. No boy can rise who slights his work.

Work. The world is not going to pay you for loafing. Ninety per cent of what men call genius is only talent for hard work.

Enter into that business or trade which you like best and for which nature seems to have fitted you, providing it is honorable.

Be honest. Dishonesty seldom makes one rich, and when it does, riches is a curse. There is no such thing as dishonest success.

Don't try to begin at the top. Begin at the bottom, and you will have a chance to rise, and will be surer of reaching the top some time.—Evangel.

To Stop the Discord.

The prodigious and conflicting clamor of pianos in the main building at the World's fair is to cease, and only one piano will be played at a time in one portion of the music section. Each exhibitor will have his 10 or 15 minutes, and he will thus make no discords, as the other pianos and organs that are scheduled for the same time will be separated from him by some hundreds of feet and several partitions.

Skatemaking In Midsummer.

Manufacturers are this season receiving larger orders than ever for skates. One company received two orders in one week—one for 100,000 pairs and another for 50,000 pairs. This is the busy season for the manufacturer of skates.—Hardware.

Where the Blame Belongs.

One of the lovely nymphs who was floating about among the sylvan woods and streams during the summer has among her belongings a gown which the prosy man who pays the nymph's bills considers not a dream, but a very substantial reality, as it cost him $500 over and above the original price. That was the sum he paid for one of the horses that took cold while the carriage waited at the door of the modiste when the gown was being fitted. He had been clipped, and the illness resulted in his death. The owner of the "creation," however, thinks the unreasonable man should place the blame where it belongs—on the modiste of the fashionable horse.—New York Times.

This Year's Juicy Melons.

It is one comfort that financial stringency hasn't hoarded up and hidden away all the peaches and melons. The quality as to most fruits is hardly up to the customary mark this year, and a good many apples fail to attain their customary size and flavor. Even the tomato is inclined to indicate a little falling off. The watermelons are good. If the market does not show quite such huge ones as a few of the big southern melons seen here in most years at this season, the supply of good sized ones is abundant and the quality good.

The only criticism is that while they were probably harvested and sent north at the customary time not all of them for some reason have fully and completely ripened this time. In the heart of many of the sweetest will be found a streak or two of unripeness. But this criticism does not apply to all. Some of the southern melons are as sugary as they are juicy, and how good they are these hot days, especially after a few hours of cooling near the ice! Those who have not tried them in the morning before breakfast have something to learn of their excellence at that hour.—Hartford Times.

A Narrow Escape.

A narrow escape from "a mysterious dispensation of Providence" is reported in Aroostook county, where a farmer was tending a horse fork, unloading hay, with a lighted cigar in his mouth. He placed the fork, and as the forkful started it hit the cigar, which flew out of his mouth and went up with the hay. But his buildings are yet standing.—Lewiston Journal.

The first European bank, founded at Barcelona in 1401, issued no bank notes. The first ones circulated in Europe were from the Bank of Stockholm in 1668.

Turkish toweling in pure white is considered the most correct thing for the covering of chairs and couches in the summer sitting room.

We have our opinions of people who are always pretending they want to hide from newspaper interviewers and reporters, and who abuse these nice young gentlemen and ladies as a nuisance. The fact is, it is the newspaper that makes people nowadays. The person who is never interviewed does not amount to much.

All this summer the German papers of America have been sadly exercised over the Weltausstellungssonntagsfragen. Their editors wax thin and pale. If the World's fair directors had known their action would give rise to a word like that, they never would have tried to open the show on Sunday.

A movement looking to the abolishment of free lunches is on foot among the New York State Liquor Dealers' association. They think apparently that it does not pay these hard times. The funny man of the New York Tribune suggests that they keep up the lunches and let the bar go.

Statistics of Russia's Army.

According to the Sviet, a St. Petersburg paper, Russia, unlike other European countries, incorporates in the army only one-fourth of the young men who are drafted every year when they reach the legal age for military service. The recruiting department in 1892 enlisted 768,672 conscripts, but only 260,390 were actually sent into the ranks. Of these, 195,000 were orthodox, 16,000 Israelites and 9,000 Mohammedans; the Russian army is therefore composed of men belonging to the national religion. There were also in the contingent called to service in 1892 193,000 men of pure Russian origin, 17,000 Poles, 4,000 Germans, 10,000 Jews, 3,689 Bashkires, and a small number of Lithuanians, Tartars, etc., so that the Russian army can be considered as being quite homogeneous in regard to its nationality.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

SMALL BUT EFFECTIVE,

Was the little Monitor that met the Merrimac at Hampton Roads. So too are Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, effective in conquering the enemy—disease. When you take a pill it's an important point to have them small—provided they have equal strength and efficacy. You find what you want in these little liver pills of Dr. Pierce. They're put up in a better way, and they act in a better way, than the huge old-fashioned pills. What you want when you're "all out of sorts"—grumpy, thick-headed and take a gloomy view of life, is these Pellets to clear up your system and start your liver into healthful action. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels, are prevented, relieved, and cured. Put up in sealed glass vials, and always fresh and reliable.

MEMORY OF PREVIOUS EXISTENCE.

Strange Story Told of a Man Who Lived in Effingham County, Illinois.

"I have a number of friends who have shadowy recollections of a previous existence upon the earth," said a theosophist to a writer for the Pittsburg Dispatch. "You doubtless have also had experiences when an indefinable, vague remembrance of something or somebody came to you which puzzled you and made you say, 'I'm sure I've seen that before.' Yet you may know positively that, as far as this present existence is concerned, it was impossible for you to have received even an idea of the place or person. I have often met people with whom I became intimate at first sight. It seems, as I have often told them, that I had known them for years. It was only the other evening that I met a lady from San Francisco whose face had been in my mind for years. As soon as we met there seemed to be something that drew us together. We were as old friends. The most remarkable instance I ever heard is that of the daughter of Isaac Fulton. Twelve years ago he resided in Effingham county, Ill. While there he buried a daughter named Maria, who was taken away just as she was budding into womanhood. About a year later he removed to Dakota, where he still resides. About three years after his daughter's death he was blessed with another little girl, who was christened Nellie, it being the favorite name of his wife. When the little one became old enough to talk she persisted in calling herself Maria. She became quite angry when told her name was Nellie. She said the name belonged to her, as her parents used to call her Maria. A matter of business took Mr. Fulton back to Effingham county and for company he took Nellie along. The father was surprised at the intuitive knowledge the girl had of the place. She not only recognized the old home, but many people she had never seen, whom the first daughter had been acquainted with. About a mile from the home was a school house where Maria had gone to school. Little Nellie had never seen the place, yet she gave an accurate description of it to her father and expressed a strong desire to visit it. Accordingly her father took her out to the school-house. As soon as she was inside, she marched straight up to the desk her sister had occupied and said: 'This is mine.' In telling the story Mr. Fulton said it seemed as if the dead had come back from the grave, but her mother would not have it so. She says if that is true she had but one child, and God gave her two."

The Hen and Family Rations.

Too many farmers depend too much on the village grocer for their table supplies, which exhausts the profits of the farm. This is a great mistake. A good vegetable garden, a variety of small fruits and an orchard with plenty of fruit for the table and some to sell, are much more satisfactory than what you are able to buy at the store. A well-kept poultry-yard with eggs the year round and fowl for the roast or stew as often as desired afford a family an independence not found elsewhere.

Every farmer who knows what he is about keeps a few hens, as there is no other product on the farm that pays better profit on money and labor than a flock of hens well attended, especially in the winter season. We do not mean to say that there is more profit in winter, but they need more care, as in summer they will, with freedom, mostly look after themselves. Some will say, "my hens do not pay for their keeping." This is true in many cases, but it is always the fault of the man and not the hens.

Those of you who are blaming your hens because they do not lay should consider the reason. Have they warm quarters? They cannot lay in winter unless they have green food, such as cabbage and the like, and plenty of shells, ground or powdered bones, and gravel. Give them warm water for drink. Give them warm mash in the morning, made of wheat bran and corn meal, or corn meal and ground oats. If you do this, and your hens do not lay then you may blame your hens.

FORCING A CONSENT

From the French of Ferdinand Beissier, in the Strand Magazine.

"But uncle, I love my cousin!"

"Get out!"

"Give her to me."

"Don't bother me!"

"It will be my death!"

"Nonsense! you'll console yourself with some other girl."

"Pray—"

My uncle, whose back had been toward me, whirled round, his face red to bursting, and brought his closed fist down upon the counter with a heavy thump.

"Never!" he cried: "Never! Do you hear what I say?"

And as I looked at him beseechingly and with joined hands he went on:

"A pretty husband you look like! without a sou, and dreaming of going into housekeeping! A nice mess I should make of it by giving you my daughter! It's no use your insisting. You know that when I have said 'No,' nothing under the sun can make me say 'Yes.'"

I ceased to make any further appeal. I knew my uncle—about as headstrong as old fellow as could be found in a day's search. I contented myself with giving vent to a deep sigh and then went on with the furbishing of a big double-handed sword, rusty from point to hilt.

This memorial conversation took place, in fact, in the shop of my maternal uncle, a well-known dealer in antiquities and objets d'art, 53 Rue des Claquettes, at the sign of the "Maltese Cross"—a perfect museum of curiosities.

Time out of mind the shop had belonged to the Cornuberts. It passed regularly from father to son, and my uncle—his neighbors said—could not but be the possessor of a nice little fortune. Held in esteem by all, a municipal councillor, impressed by the importance and gravity of his office, short, fat, highly choleric, and headstrong, but at bottom not in the least degree an unkind sort of a man such was my Uncle Cornubert, my only living male relative, who as soon as I left school had elevated me to the dignity of chief and only clerk and shopman of the "Maltese Cross."

But my uncle was not only dealer in antiquities and a municipal councillor—he was yet more, and above all, the father of my cousin Rose, with whom I was naturally in love.

To come back to the point at which I digressed.

Without paying any attention to the sighs which exhaled from my bosom while scouring the rust from my long two-handed sword, my uncle, magnifying glass in hand, was engaged in the examination of a lot of medals which he had purchased that morning. Suddenly he raised his head; 5 o'clock was striking.

"The Council!" he cried.

When my uncle pronounced that august word it made a mouthful; for a pin he would have saluted it bareheaded. But this time, after a moment's consideration, he tapped his forehead and added, in a tone of supreme relief:

"No, the sitting does not take place before to-morrow—and I am forgetting that I have to go to the railway station to get the consignment of which I was advised this morning."

Rising from his seat and laying down his glass he called out:

"Rose, give me my cane and hat."

Then turning quickly toward me, he added in a lowered tone and speaking very quickly:

"As to you, don't forget our conversation. If you think you can make me say 'yes,' try!—but I don't think you will succeed. Meanwhile not a word to Rose, or, by St. Barthelemy, my patron of happy memory, I'll instantly kick you out of doors!"

At that moment Rose appeared with my uncle's cane and hat, which she handed to him. He gave her a kiss on the forehead; then, giving me a last but eloquent look hurried from the shop.

I went on scouring my double-handed sword. Rose came quietly toward me.

"What is the matter with my father?" she asked; "he seems to be angry with you."

I looked at her—her eyes were so black, her look so kind, her mouth so rosy, and her teeth so white that I told her all—my love, my suit to her father, and his rough refusal. I could not help it—after all, it was his fault! He was not there; I determined to brave his anger. Besides, there is nobody like timid persons for displaying courage under certain circumstances.

My cousin said nothing; she only held down her eyes—while her cheeks were as red as those of cherries in May.

I checked myself.

"Are you angry with me?" I asked; trembling. "Are you angry with me, Rose?"

She held out to me her hand. On that, my heart seething with audacity, my head on fire, I cried:

"Rose—I swear it! I will be your husband!" And as she shook her head and looked at me sadly, I added: "Oh! I well know that my uncle is self-willed, but I will be more self-willed still; and, since he must be forced to say 'yes,' I will force him to it!"

"But how?" asked Rose.

Ah! how? That was exactly the difficulty. But no matter; I would find a way to surmount it!

At that moment a heavy step resounded in the street. Instinctively we moved away from each other; I returned to my double-handed sword, and Rose, to keep herself in countenance, set to dusting with the corner of her apron a little statuette in its faded red velvet case.

My uncle entered. Surprised at finding us together, he stopped short and looked sharply at us, from one to the other.

We each of us went on bubbling with but raising our heads.

"Here, take this," said my uncle, handing me a bulky parcel from under his arm. "A splendid purchase, you'll see."

The subject did not interest me in the least.

I opened the parcel, and from the enveloping paper emerged a steel helmet—but not an ordinary helmet, oh, no!—a superb, a monumental morion, with gorget and pointed visor of strange form. The visor was raised, and I tried to discover what prevented it from being lowered.

"It will not go down—the hinges have got out of order," said my uncle; "but it's a superb piece, and when it has been thoroughly cleaned and touched up will look well—that shall be your to-morrow's job."

"Very good, uncle," I murmured, not daring to raise my eyes to his.

That night on reaching my home I at once went to bed. I was eager to be alone and able to think at my ease. Night brings counsel, it is said, and I had great need that the proverb should prove true. But after lying awake for an hour without receiving any assistance I fell off to sleep and till next morning did nothing but dream the oddest dreams. I saw Rose on her way to church in a strange bridal costume, a fourteenth century cap, three feet high, on her head, but looking prettier than ever; then suddenly the scene changed to moonlight, in which innumerable helmets and pieces of old china were dancing a wild farandola, while my uncle clad in complete armor and with a formidable halberd in his hand conducted the bewildering whirl.

The next day—ah, the next day!—I was no nearer. In vain, with clenched teeth, I scoured the immense helmet brought by my uncle the previous evening—scoured it with such fury as almost to break the iron; not an idea came to me; but I could think of nothing, of no way of forcing him to give me his daughter.

At 3 o'clock Rose went into the country, whence she was not to return until dinner time in the evening. On the threshold she could only make a sign to me with her hand; my uncle had not left us alone for a single instant. He was not easy in his mind; I could see that by his face. No doubt he had not forgotten our conversation of the previous evening.

I went on rubbing at my helmet.

"You have made it quite bright enough—put it down," said my uncle.

I put it down. The storm was gathering. I could not do better than to allow it to blow over.

But suddenly, as if overtaken by a strange fancy, my uncle took up the great morion and turned and examined it on all sides.

"A handsome piece of armor there is no doubt about it; but it must have weighed pretty heavily on its wearer's shoulders," he muttered, and, urged by I know not what demon, he clapped it on his head and latched the gorget-piece about his neck.

Struck almost speechless, I watched what he was doing—thinking only how ugly he looked.

Suddenly there was a sharp sound—as if a spring had snapped—and crack!—down fell the visor; and there was my uncle, with his head in an iron cage, gesticulating and swearing like a pagan!

I could contain myself no longer, and burst into a roar of laughter; for my uncle, stumpy, fat and rubicund, presented an irresistibly comic appearance.

Threateningly he came toward me.

"The hinges!—the hinges, fool!" he yelled.

I could not see his face, but I felt that it was red to bursting.

"When you have done laughing, idiot!" he cried.

But the helmet swayed so oddly on his shoulders, his voice came from out it in such strange tones, that the more he gesticulated, the more he yelled and threatened me the louder I laughed.

At that moment the clock of the Hotel de Ville, striking 5, was heard.

"The municipal Council," murmured my uncle in a stifled voice, "Quick! help me off with this beast of a machine! We'll settle our business afterward."

But, suddenly likewise, an idea—a wild, extraordinary idea—came into my head; but then, whoever is madder than a lover? Besides I had no choice of means.

"No!" I replied.

My uncle fell back two paces in terror—and again the enormous helmet wobbled on his shoulders.

"No," I repeated firmly, "I'll not help you out unless you give me the hand of my cousin Rose!"

From the depths of the strangely elongated visor came, not an angry exclamation but a veritable roar. I had "done it!"—I had burned my ships!

"If you do not consent to do what I ask of you," I added, "not only will I not help you off with your helmet, but will call in your neighbors, and then go and find the municipal council!"

"You'll end your days on the scaffold!" cried my uncle.

"The hand of Rose?" I repeated. "You told me it would only be by force that you would be made to say yes—say it, or I will call in the neighbors."

The clock was still striking; my uncle raised his arms as if to curse me.

"Decide at once," I cried; "somebody is coming!"

"Well, then—yes," murmured my uncle. "But make haste."

"On your word of honor?"

"On my word of honor!"

The visor gave way, the gorget-piece also, and my uncle's head issued from durance, red as a poppy.

Just in time. The chemist at the corner, a colleague in the municipal council, entered the shop.

"Are you coming?" he asked; "they will be beginning the business without us."

"I'm coming," replied my uncle.

And without looking at me he took up his hat and cane and hurried out.

The next moment all my hopes had vanished. My uncle would surely not forgive me.

At dinner time I took my place at table on his right hand in low spirits, ate little and said nothing.

"It will come with the dessert," I thought.

Rose looked at me and I avoided meeting her eyes. As I had expected, the dessert over, my uncle lit his pipe, raised his head and then——

"Rose—come here."

Rose went to him.

"Do you know what that fellow there asked me to do yesterday?"

I trembled like a leaf, and Rose did the same.

"To give him your hand," he added. "Do you love him?"

Rose cast down her eyes.

"Very well," continued my uncle, "on this side the case is complete. Come here, you."

I approached him.

"Here I am, uncle."

He burst into a hearty laugh.

"Marry her then, donkey—since you love her and I give her to you."

"Ah—uncle!"

"Ah—dear papa!"

And Rose and I threw ourselves into his arms.

"Very good, very good," he cried, wiping his eyes. "Be happy; that's all I ask."

And in turn he whispered in my ear:

"I should have given her to you all the same, you big goose: but—keep the story of the helmet between us two!"

I will give you my word that I have never told it but to Rose, my dear little wife. And, if you ever pass along the Rue des Claquette, No. 53, at the place of honor in the old shop, I'll show you my uncle's helmet, which we would never sell.

Infamous Russian Proverbs.

Russian proverbs about women seem to indicate either that Russian men are unkind and ungallant, or that Russian women are hard to "get along with." Here are some samples of the popular sayings of the people:

Love thy wife as thy soul, shake her like a plum-tree.

Always beat your wife before dinner; also before supper.

Long hair, short memory.

The dog is more intelligent than woman, for he never barks at his master.

Twice is woman dear; when she comes to the house, and when she leaves it.

Before going to war say a prayer; before going to sea say two prayers; before marrying say three prayers.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

Popular Stones for Jewelry.

Through all changes, when every stone seems to have its day, the diamond stands alone; incomparable. In these days stones are brought into prominence to meet the demand for variety, and such stones as the amethyst, the aquamarine, the chrysoberyl, the golden carnelian and many other stones known as semi-precious are so wonderfully cut and set as to greatly increase their intrinsic value. These stones are very fashionable just at present, set in the form of collar and girdle. The turquoise has been more universally adopted in recent years than any other stone. The greatest number, and some of the most beautiful, have of late years been found in our own country. During the last three years $400,000 worth of American turquoises have been used. And the opal—that exquisite stone with its fairy light dancing over its delicate surface—just now it is finding its reward, after many years of prejudice. Indeed, so far as the old superstition regarding this stone been removed that it has become, when set in diamonds, one of the chosen stones for the engagement ring, and the woman who can claim among her associates the most beautiful opal is to be envied, not pitied.—Jewelers' Circular.

The One Original Gift.

When one hears of a Washington bride who has to find shelving for thirteen dozen of decorated china plates and thirty-three bon-bon dishes, one wishes for a little more originality on the part of givers. A check is always original. Needlework is coming in as bridal gifts; house and table linen, carved chests—nothing could be more welcome. But even this should not be overdone. It is barely possible to have too many doylies and table centers, luxurious and gratifying as these dainty bits of napery are. A French count recently presented to his bride not only an heirloom lace handkerchief, but a beautiful bedspread in finest cambric and costly lace. In the middle of the spread was embroidered the family coat of arms. Now a counterpart of the sort worked by the bride's young friends would be a treasure, indeed, and would last, as only linen cambric does last, for a lifetime.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Children's Eyes.

A physician advises mothers to discard bangs even for their smallest daughters, these very little girls being the only ones whom fashion, at the moment, permits to wear them. There are, it seems, sensitive nerves about the eye-brows which are weakened when the hair is long enough to rest upon them. These nerves directly concern the sight, and that important function is more or less tampered with by this constant though slight weight of hair.

Another physician inveighs against another practice, that of having night lights in children's bedrooms. This he pronounces very injurious. Instead of allowing the optic nerves the perfect rest afforded by darkness, the light keeps them in perpetual stimulation, with the results of causing the brain and the rest of the nervous system to suffer.

The Work of the Masseuse.

The chief masseuse in a New York woman's athletic club, whose duty it is to "rub down" the gymnasts after an hour's hard work with the oars, boxing gloves, dumb bells, foils, etc., lives on a diet of rare broiled steak, dry bread and sweet milk. She drinks a quart of milk at each meal, and consumes 2 1-2 pounds of meat a day. Between meals she has hot tea, coffee or beef-tea, soft eggs, raw oysters and toast; and before going to bed she takes the juice of a couple of oranges, a grape fruit or bunch of grapes. Often she gives a massage to twenty women and children a day. Her arms are muscular, and she has a pair of hard, strong hands that this exhaustive occupation has made abnormally large. Only an operator of great vitality could do this work, and only wholesome and readily assimilated nourishment could sustain the system.—New York Journal.

Church Dress.

In nothing does a woman show the instinct of a lady more, than in her church dress. It is both vulgar and disrespectful to go to the house of God in a costume which is pre-eminently worn for show. A quiet color in a refined fabric, simply made, is the only suitable costume. Large hats are decidedly not the thing. A small close bonnet for matrons, and a round hat or toque, or turban for younger women, are the correct styles approved by good taste. Jewelry is in very bad form, and so are very light and showy gloves. It is not that religion should be regarded as a thing of gloomy and somber character, but because one should subordinate every consideration to that of devotion in divine praise, prayer and service; and a showy costume is out of harmony with the quiet, sacred and engrossing pleasures of the hour.—Jeness Miller Monthly.

Traveling dresses for the most part are of hop sacking, made with a short plain skirt simply stitched about the bottom. Last spring the modest suit was the one with the Eton jacket; this season the jacket is called the garcon de cafe, or just garcon. There is a strong resemblance between the two, but the latter is a trifle more Parisian, extending from a point below the waist, made single-breasted, with rolling collar slightly shaped into revers, and very large sleeves, box-plaited at top. It is to be worn over silk blouses exactly as last year. The Eton suit was far too convenient to be discarded, but of course rulers of fashion deemed it necessary to modify it somewhat for a second season.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, March 6.—The debate on the pension appropriation bill continued all day in the house and at times considerable spirit was displayed.

Mr. Dolliver (Rep. Iowa) said he would not have obtruded himself in this debate were he not in receipt of letters complaining in terms that excited his sympathy with the present management of the pension office.

Mr. Hepburn (Rep. Iowa) declared that the first proof of hostility to pensioners by the administration was found in the fact that Grover Cleveland was president; second, that Hoke Smith was secretary of the interior. When Hoke Smith went into office, he continued, 567,000 applications were pending. The applicants were dying at the rate of 17,000 a year. Instead of adjudicating these cases the department went back and suspended 12,000 pensioners whose cases were in lawyers adjudicta. How did this record compare with that of his predecessor, who in the previous six months allowed 110,000 claims? He denied that there were any great number of fraudulent pensioners.

Mr. Tawney (Rep. Minn.) continued the debate in opposition to the pension policy of the administration.

Mr. Baldwin (Dem., Minn.) gave a humorous description of the the war dogs of the other side; Mr. Dolliver who was only prevented from charging on the serried ranks of rebellion and of having himself enshrined on the pension roll by his tender youth; Cannon, whose old age thirty years ago enabled him to escape the draft, and Pickler, who now refused to smooth the front of grim-visaged war. "In the name of God and a suffering people," he concluded, "let us have peace." (Laughter and applause.)

The senate held a short session and but little business of importance was transacted. A brief debate on silver was precipitated by the intention expressed by the vice president to refer to Bland seigniorage bill (which had just been received from the house) to the finance committee. Mr. Stewart of Nevada opposed this disposition of the bill, and asked that it be allowed to lie on the table subject to being called up at any time. This was finally ordered. Mr. Stewart at the same time offered a free silver amendment to the bill. The only other event of interest was the offering by Mr. Morgan of Louisiana of a resolution looking to the appointment of a tariff commission member which he offered as a substitute to the tariff bill. A number of bills of minor importance were passed.

Washington, March 7.—The debate on the pension appropriation bill was continued to-day in the house, the feature of the day being Gen. Sickles' speech criticizing the action of Commissioner Lochren. An agreement was reached whereby the debate on the bill will close tomorrow. Before the debate began today the resolution for the investigation of Judge Jenkins' writ of injunction against the Northern Pacific railway employes was taken up and passed.

A somewhat amusing episode enlivened the senate proceedings to-day, inaugurated by Senator Berry's personal explanation. A New York newspaper had included him in a group of portraits of nine Democratic senators whom it charged with being "obstructionists" to the tariff bill. Mr. Berry denied that he had ever been anything but an earnest advocate of the bill, and on all occasions had urged its speedy report to the senate without modification. His explanation was followed by explanations from Senators Faulkner, Call, McLaurin and Morgan, which led to much amusement in the senate chamber. The main interest of the day centered about the discussion as to the disposal of the Bland bill. Mr. Stewart gave notice that tomorrow he would move to take it up and make it the business before the senate until disposed of. Mr. Teller also spoke on the same subject.

Washington, March 8.—After five days of debate the pension appropriation bill, carrying $151,000,000, passed the house without division. Throughout the debate there had been no criticism of the amount carried by the bill, debate being on the one hand confined to an assault on the manner in which the present commissioner of pensions had administered the office and his alleged unauthorized suspension of pensions, and on the other to a defense of the attempt of the commissioner to purge the rolls of those who were not entitled to a place upon them. Yesterday there were several very spirited speeches, those by Gen. Henderson of Iowa, Mr. O'Neill in closing the debate and ex-Speaker Grow. All the amendments to the bill, save one, that of Mr. Pickler to make the reports of the examining surgeons open to the inspection of the applicant or his attorneys, were defeated. They all fell under points of order that they were not germane. The one which attracted most attention was that of Mr. Enloe to repeal a portion of the provision included in the act of last December to prevent the suspension of any pension except on thirty days' notice as to permit the suspension in case of plain prime facie evidence that the pensioner had procured his pension by forgery, perjury or other palpable fraud. This amendment was offered at the suggestion of Commissioner Lochren himself, who, under the opinion of the attorney general, declared that if the act of last December stood over $500,000 would have to be paid out to suspended pensioners who were proven beyond all question not to be longer entitled to the pensions they had been drawing. Mr. Outhwaite, the chairman of the committee of the whole, however, ruled the amendment out on Mr. Martin's point of order that it was not germane.

An exciting and interesting debate was precipitated in the senate yesterday by Mr. Harris' motion for the second reading of the seigniorage bill. This was opposed by Mr. Sherman, who moved its reference to the finance committee, and in the course of a strong speech in opposition to the bill said that its object was to divert a trust fund from its legitimate purpose—a thing which in Ohio would be a penitentiary offense. His motion was defeated and the bill taken up as unfinished business, and almost before any one was aware of what had happened it passed its third reading and was on the point of passing the senate. Then its opponents recovered from their surprise and endeavored to prevent its passage, and on request of Senator Sherman it went over until to-morrow.

Washington, March 9.—The Bland seigniorage bill was laid before the senate as unfinished business. Mr. Sherman bitterly opposed the pending bill and expressed the hope that the motion to reconsider would prevail, as he wanted the bill open to amendments. Mr. Harris claimed that the bill had reached its present stage through the regular channels of the senate procedure and he knew of no reason why the bill should not be disposed of within thirty minutes. He would not consent to reconsider the bill until the majority by an aye and nay vote decided it. The bill went over without action until to-morrow, when a vote will be taken.

In the house the conference report on the urgent deficiency bill was presented by Mr. Ayres and agreed to. A resolution of inquiry calling on the secretary of the treasury for a report of all unsettled claims up to date against the Southern and Central Pacific railroad and their branches for transportation service was adopted. The house then went into committee of the whole for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. After debate the committee arose and the house adjourned.

Washington, March 10.—To-day was a field day for Senator Pettigrew. He introduced a bill removing the charge of desertion from the name of H. H. Cook of Sioux Falls and another giving to J. W. Taylor of Canton a year's pay for the year he served during the rebellion, when he was so young that he could not be regularly enlisted. He was only twelve years old when he first went out, and was regularly enlisted a year later. The senator also secured the passage of the bill appropriating $200,000 for the relief of Crow Creek reservation settlers. The house committee recommended only $110,000 for this purpose, and the amount will have to be settled in conference. He further offered a lengthy resolution of inquiry designed to throw some light on the silver question. The senate discussed the Bland bill, and agreed to vote upon the measure the latter part of next week.

The house put in the day on the District of Columbia bill.

Washington, March 12.—Appropriation bills continue to have right of way in the house. The sundry civil bill, which was to be unfinished business when the house met to-day, carries $32,306,382; $9,409,028 less than that of last year. It will probably require four days to dispose of this bill, the two items that will provoke the most opposition being the appropriations for the geological and the coast and geodetic survey. After the sundry civil bill is disposed of, either the military or consular and diplomatic appropriation bill will consume the balance of the week.

In accordance with the agreement entered into the senate resumed consideration of the Bland seigniorage bill. The agreement for the consideration of the seigniorage bill does not preclude the routine work of the senate, which is confined to the time before 2 o'clock in the day, and it is probable that many of the bills on the calendar upon which no division of sentiment is probable, will be taken up and passed during this time, and also after the seigniorage bill is disposed of the latter part of the week.

South Dakota Gold.

Custer City, S. D., March 12.—One of the richest gold strikes ever made in Custer county was made to-day on the 100-foot level in the Old Charley mine, four miles southwest of this place. The ore is a white quartz, liberally sprinkled with fine gold, bismuth, teluride and sylvanite. The extent of the ore is about twenty inches in width.

Boston Men Assign.

Boston, March 12.—Morse, Smith & Co., produce merchants, assigned to-day with liabilities of $200,000. The firm is involved in the failure of J. B. Morin & Co. of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, who were the Western agents of the Boston firm. The assets are said to be largely in excess of the liabilities.

Will Draw Party Lines.

Crookston, Minn., March 12.—For the first time in the history of the city party lines will be drawn at the coming election for municipal officers. The Democrats will hold a convention March 22 and the Republicans two days later.

Lays It to Lavalle.

St. Paul, March 12.—The investigation of Auditor Burns at St. Paul took a very sensational turn, when Burns went on the stand and swore that all the names he had checked off the delinquent tax list had been done under the instructions of Commissioner Lavallee.

The Herda Jury Disagrees.

St. Paul, March 12.—The jury in the Fisher, or Rice, case for the murder of Herda went out at 10:30 Saturday morning and at 9 a. m. yesterday reported that they could not agree and were discharged.

The Mayor Had a Scrap.

Cedar Falls, Iowa, March 12.—At the Nashua city election three disgraceful rows occurred, in one of which the mayor of the city was badly worsted in a hand to hand fight.

Guilty of Murder.

Waupaca, Wis., March 12.—James Cheyne, who shot Robert Murphy Aug. 25 last, was found guilty of murder in the first degree. Cheyne fell to the floor in a faint.

Salary Fixed.

Oshkosh, Wis., March 12.—The county board yesterday fixed the salary of the sheriff at $1,500 per year. Heretofore the sheriff has drawn from $8,000 to $12,000 in fees and perquisites.

Building at Aberdeen.

Aberdeen, S. D., March 12.—It seems certain that a fine opera house and several business blocks will be built as soon as spring opens.

Big Lumber Fire.

Clare, Mich., March 12.—The entire plant and stock of the Lansing Lumber company at Dodge burned this afternoon. The loss is about $175,000, believed to be covered by insurance.

WHAT KIND OF A CAPITOL MINNESOTA MAY GET.

Hon. E. E. Corliss Tells of the Trip of the Minnesota Capitol Commission—The Indiana Capitol, Costing $2,000,000, Is Just the Thing.

St. Paul, March 10.—Hon. E. W. Corliss was in St. Paul to-day on his return from an extended trip through the East, where he went, with other members of the capitol commission, for the purpose of examining public buildings in order to get ideas and suggestions for Minnesota's new capitol. Five members of the commission made the journey—Channing Seabury of St. Paul, H. W. Lamberton of Winona, George A. Du Toit of Chaska, Col. McHench of Fairmount and Mr. Corliss. Col. Graves of Duluth and John De Laittre of Minneapolis were in Florida and did not join the party. Gov. Nelson intended to go, but was detained by a press of business from which he could not escape. The commission went first to Des Moines, Iowa, which was supposed to have a model capitol. It cost $3,000,000, and of course is a very elegant building. Mr. Corliss said that the stairway is the finest thing that he saw in any public building on the trip. The Iowa capitol, while having a great many excellent features, is deficient in many points, and did not please the commission as well as it was supposed it would. From Des Moines the commission went to Lansing, Mich., which has a fine capitol by the same architect who planned Texas' $6,000,000 structure. The Lansing building did not impress the commissioners altogether favorably, and they went from there to Indianapolis. Here they found practically what they wanted, and what Mr. Corliss says is an ideal capitol. The building is characterized as having utility, beauty, strength and business. The building cost about $2,000,000, which is what the State of Minnesota expects to spend. From Indianapolis they went to Pittsburg, which has the model government building, and also a very fine court house. After examining these structures the commission had a few hours and they went to Homestead to see about structural iron. From Pittsburg they went to Hartford to see Connecticut's model capitol. This building, Mr. Corliss says, is the handsomest building on the exterior, and inside it has many excellent features, but there is more ornamentation than Minnesota desires. As a result of the investigation the commission will doubtless select plans more similar to the Indiana capitol than any other.

Big Pine Land Deal.

Minneapolis, March 10.—The consummation of the biggest deal in Minnesota pine lands of recent years is announced to-day. The negotiations which have been pending for the transfer of a vast stumpage in the northern part of the state held by C. A. Pillsbury & Co. and T. B. Walker to a syndicate of Minneapolis lumbermen, which includes practically all the lumber manufacturing firms of the city, have been brought to a successful close. This is said to be the biggest body of standing pine in the world, for which the Frederick Weyerhauser syndicate was negotiating last summer. The panic caused these negotiations to fall through at the time, and now the Minneapolis lumbermen have gathered in the prize. Most of the pine is in the vicinity of Leech lake, and it will be brought to Brainerd by the logging railroad constructed by the Northern Mill company which is now to be pushed into the heart of the pine country. The logs will be floated to Minneapolis on the Mississippi and sawed here. It is estimated that there is enough pine in the stumpage involved in the deal to keep the dozen saw mills busy for twenty years. The practical effect of the deal is to unite the Minneapolis lumber interests in one organization, so far as the purchase of logs is concerned. The tract covers thirty townships, and is estimated to contain 225,000 acres of pine. The amount of pine is estimated at 1,500,000,000 feet, and the deal involves a matter of $10,000,000. None of the parties to it will disclose the price per thousand to be paid, but it's plain that it is a low figure, and that the effect of the deal will be to unify Minneapolis prices. The firms composing the syndicate are Nelson, Tenney & Co., E. W. Backus & Co., The Shevlin-Carpenter company, Carpenter Bros. & Co., Leavitt, Horr & Co. and J. W. Bay & Co. of Minneapolis and Welles Bros. of Clinton, Iowa. The sale includes the Brainerd & Minnesota logging road and the saw mills, planing mill and entire plant of the Northern Mill Company at Brainerd.

Killed a Sea Dog.

New York, March 10.—Charles Silas, of the Belmore house in Far Rockaway, killed a sea dog yesterday while walking along the beach. When near what is known as Hog Island he saw an animal somewhat resembling a seal lying asleep on the sands. The animal was of a yellowish white color, with black rings on his back like those of a leopard. Disturbed by the approach of Silas, it started toward him, showing its tusks. The only weapon Silas had was a small stick, and this was snapped in two by the teeth of the animal. A heavier club was secured and the sea dog was killed after a stubborn fight. It had a long snout-like nose, with whiskers about the nostrils. The ears were short and rounded. The fore legs were short, with long sharp claws. The hind legs were flipper-like. The tail was short and the entire body was covered with short, harsh hair. Silas will have the animal stuffed.

The Cowboy Races.

Chadron, Neb., March 10.—The date for the cowboy races has been changed to June 5, 6 and 7, instead of April. This will bring them at the best time in the year. Great interest is manifested.

After a Postoffice.

Eau Claire, Wis., March 10.—A document in support of Allen Burditt, vice president of the Dells Lumber company, as a candidate for the Eau Claire postoffice is being actively circulated to-day, signed by many citizens. Hitherto the gentlemen most prominent in the supposed candidacy for the office have been Emmet Horan, ex-register of the United States land office, and Capt. J. M. Ballard. It now looks as though there would be quite a spirited competition among the shining lights of the local Democracy.

To Kill Solid Doves.

Huron, S. D., March 10.—A lively sensation was created here by Belle Smith, Alice Simmons and a woman named Greenleaf, who wanted warrants issued for certain women whose husbands and sons visited their place, charging them with attempting to kill them by placing chloroform and sulphuric acid gas in their rooms while asleep. The Smith girl was unconscious for several hours, and the other two were rendered quite sick. The evidence did not warrant the issues, but the affair will be investigated and sensational developments are looked for. Several ladies of the city have endeavored to rid the town of disreputable characters, but it is not thought any of them had any connection with this affair.

Crop Report.

Washington, March 10.—The government crop report for the year ended March 1 will be made public this afternoon. The report from the agents of the agricultural department have all been received and compiled. The unknown quantity which this report is expected to disclose is the amount of wheat now in the hands of the farmers, and the total which will be given out to-day will go a long way toward settling the question of whether the government estimates of the yield for the last two or three years are as far out of the way as has been claimed by some of those who have made a study of the matter. Statistician Robinson when seen this morning declined to forestall his report of this afternoon by an inkling of what it would show, but it is thought that it will indicate about 160,000,000 bushels.

Peace in Sight.

San Francisco, March 10.—The Call says the recent difficulties which have arisen between the Santa Fe and the Southern Pacific are about to be overcome and rates restored to their former standard. President Reinhart, of the Santa Fe, and President Crocker, of the Southern Pacific, have been in active telegraphic communication on the subject, with the result that it is mutually agreed to discontinue the war as soon as possible, and to discuss and remedy the differences which have existed when a meeting can be arranged between the two gentlemen named.

No Mercy From Waite.

Denver, March 10.—For the first time in his administration Gov. Waite will decline to interfere in the carrying out of capital punishment in the case of Murderers Thomas Jordan, William Neshitt and Santiago Torres. The governor has repeatedly expressed his opposition to capital punishment, and often interfered by commuting the death sentence to imprisonment for life. In the present instances, however, he has declared he will let the law take its course.

Valuable New Mexican Quarries.

Santa Fe, N. Mex., March 10.—Col. J. T. Dougine of Chicago, late judge of mining machinery at the world's fair, after five weeks' inspection of the Cochiti mining district, last night said: "The formation is excellent. There are immence dykes of porphry and quartzite running, parallel with well defined lodes. Samples of ore have been furnished me by different parties, taken from the locations, that assayed from $55 to $148 to the ton."

Reid in California.

San Francisco, March 10.—Whitelaw Reid, Republican candidate for vice president at the last election, arrived here last evening, and is now the guest of his father-in-law, D. O. Mills, at the latter's residence at Millbrae. Mr. Reid has recently been afflicted with asthmatic affection, and has come to the coast to regain his health and to escape business cares.

Death in the Wine.

New York, March 10—Five minutes after taking a teaspoonful of wine as a toast at a reception in honor of the wedding engagement of his son William and a Miss Scribner, Joseph Racker of Roselbayne, N. J., died in terrible convulsions. In accordance with Hebrew customs he was buried before sunset. The cause of his death has not yet been determined.

Shot by a Wife Beater.

Oklahoma, Okla., March 10.—John Mosier has been shot and killed twelve miles southeast of this city by Jake Collins. They had been to Norman and became intoxicated. When they reached home Collins abused and beat his wife, and when Mosier took her part turned on him and shot him, killing him instantly. Collins was arrested and is in jail at Norman.

He Ate Hot Buckshot.

Escanaba, Mich., March 10—John Homberg, a Swede aged sixty-five and single, committed suicide in his shanty in Bay Denoe township, about four miles from here, yesterday. The apparent cause was insanity. The unfortunate man shot himself with a musket which he had loaded with buckshot. He placed the muzzle in his mouth and pulled the trigger by a string.

Good Prices for Farm Lands.

West Union, Iowa, March 10—Real estate in this (Fayette) county is booming. Since Monday farm property to the amount of $60,000 has changed hands and other important deals are on hand. A farm two miles north of this city sold for $80 per acre yesterday, and from $45 to $60 is not an unusual price.

Protests Against Indian Tariff.

Calcutta, March 10.—At a large meeting of Europeans and natives held here yesterday it was unanimously resolved to protest against the exclusion of yarns and fabrics from the import duty, and it was also decided to demand the rejection of the tariff bill unless cotton was included. Resolutions to this effect were adopted and will be forwarded to the proper authorities.

A. P. A. Feud.

Troy, N. Y., March 10.—It is alleged here to-day that the fracas resulting in the death of Robert Ross was the outcome of an A. P. A. feud between him and "Bat" Shea, who is a Catholic, and Holend, who is excommunicated from the Catholic church, and who only lately became a Republican and a member of the A. P. A. It is said that in the caucus a few weeks ago, the dead man, Ross, had violent words with another member of his party over the question of endorsing Whelan, who is also a Catholic, and that in a fracas that occurred he was hurt.

REPUBLICAN LEAGUE.

OFFICIAL CALL FOR THE NEXT ANNUAL CONVENTION.

It Will Be Held in Denver in June and if a Full Representation Is Chosen Over Two Thousand Delegates Will Be Present.

Chicago, March 12.—The official call for the annual convention of the National Republican League was issued from the national headquarters in this city today. The convention will be held at Denver June 26, and will continue several days. The date had been originally set for May, but the Denver people desired that it be postponed until the latter part of June in order that it might conclude its sessions about the Fourth of July, allowing the delegates to join in a monster celebration of the nation's birthday. The total representation will exceed 2,000 delegates. The call reads, in part, as follows:

"Dazzled by the glittering promises of Democracy, and led astray by sophistry and hypocrisy the voters of the country in 1892 decided upon a change of national administration. Democratic control and sectional rule are again complete in the national government and starvation for labor and ruin for capital prevail as a result of the policies and influences that dominate the Democratic party. The hallucinations of 1892 are over. Facts have upset theories and the people, weary of this "tariff-tinkering, bond-issuing, debt-increasing, treasury-depleting, business-paralyzing, wage-reducing, queen-restoring and un-American administration," now turn instinctively to the party that saved the nation in a previous hour of peril and demonstrated masterly ability in giving the United States thirty years of prosperity, unparalleled in the history of nations. Again, it becomes the mission and duty of the Grand Old Party to meet a national emergency with the highest patriotism. The party deplores the necessity, but rises to the occasion. The struggle for liberty, progress, fair wages and all that America promises, did not end with the defeat of 1892. The fight must and will go on."

Used a Hot Poker.

Chicago, March 12.—Albert Barkowsky, eighteen years old, and George Dunn, a bartender, were arrested to-day for inflicting serious and cruel wounds upon Thomas T. Davies, a porter in a barber shop, with a red-hot poker. Davies went to the saloon owned by Barkowsky's father, greatly under the influence of liquor, and the injuries were inflicted by the prisoners. Both of his eye brows were burned away and under each eye the hot iron burned a trace an inch long and a similar mark was left behind each ear. On each wrist the skin was burned away for an inch and a half, while on each leg from the ankle up for a distance of six inches, the hot iron burned almost to the bone. In the region of the abdomen also there are several severe burns, while many of his ribs were traced with the hot metal. He will probably be crippled for life. The prisoners had no reason for their diabolical treatment of the unfortunate man except pure maliciousness.

North and South Road.

Topeka, Kan., March 12.—C. J. Jones, who is at the head of the construction company which has the contract to grade the first 100 miles of the so-called Gulf and Interstate railroad, has gone to Port Bolivar, on Galveston bay, opposite the city of Galveston, where he says he will commence work. Jones says he will "blaze the way" for the great Populist transportation project himself, making the entire journey from Galveston to Manitoba in a two-wheeled cart drawn by a team of trained buffaloes. Jones has organized four engineer corps to make the survey of the railroad. These are already in the field under the direction of C. S. Beadle of Pittsburg, Kan., the chief engineer. Jones says the money to grade the 100 miles has already been raised by the company.

Irishmen Angry.

Brooklyn, March 12.—At a meeting of the Ancient Order of Hibernians resolutions were adopted protesting against the action of Mayor Schieren in refusing to allow the Irish flag to float on the city hall on St. Patrick's day. The main resolution was as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the Irish-American citizens, comprising the Irish organizations, offer our protest against this cruel and unpatriotic insult, and that we shall consider it a part of our future duty to our people to resent this insult in every manner not in condiction with manhood, justice and honor."

Home Rule Shelved.

London, March 12.—The Daily News this morning declares that the queen's speech opening the session of parliament, which will be ready to-day, will probably promise measures of relief for the evicted tenants in Ireland, local government for Scotland, disestablishment of the church in Wales, one-man vote and conciliation in labor troubles. The paper adds that the speech will refer to the satisfactory conclusion of the Bering sea arbitration and concludes by saying that the home rule question and the question of mending the house of lords will not be mentioned.

Reds Celebrate.

Chicago, March 12.—Representatives of the United International Groups of Chicago observed the twenty-third anniversary of the Paris commune yesterday. The speeches, nearly all of which were in foreign tongues, were mild and pertained chiefly to existing labor troubles. The hall was profusely draped with red cloth. Prominent on the platform were portraits of the anarchists who were executed in Chicago.

Called Upon the King.

Rome, March 12.—Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, United States ambassador to Italy, was given an audience at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon by King Humbert. After a most cordial private conversation with the king Mr. MacVeagh introduced the members of the embassy who accompanied him. In conformity with Italian court etiquette, no speeches were delivered. Mr. MacVeagh and his party returned to the Grand hotel in the state carriages. Every ceremony due the high rank of the American ambassador was paid to him.

Crookston will elect city officers on April 3rd. The Republicans, Democrats and People's party have all decided to put a straight party ticket in the field and a lively time is expected.

Al Kaiser, the well known Fosston banker, was in town several hours last Friday. Al used to be a newspaper man and it is the only authentic case on record where a country newspaper man has developed into a banker.

The following was the ticket elected yesterday in River Falls township.

Chairman, A. S. Anderson; supervisors, Gustaf Englund, John R. Gotcia Clerk. John Peterson; Treasurer, Aug. Swenson; Assessor, A. A. Erickson; Justices, James Gilbertson, John Peterson; Constable, Ole G. Lee.

Last Friday's train came in late, lost time going to Thief River Falls, lost more time at Red Lake Falls and finally crawled out of here at 9 p. m., five hours late. Kivel's stage line is much surer and almost as fast. Surely the blessings the Great Northern confers upon the people are many and varied.

Thief River Falls had an exciting election yesterday which resulted as follows:

President, James Meehan Jr., Recorder, Lars Backe; Trustees, H. O. Hanson, Hans Langseth, Martin Evenson; Treasurer, J. W. Wallin; Justice of the Peace, T. P. Hamre; Constable, Willis D. Culver.

Messrs. Howiett and Byrnes, of South Dakota are buying stock in this vicinity and will ship several cars this week. This part of the country is well adapted to stock raising and if farmers would pay more attention to that industry Stock buyers from all parts of the country would be attracted and a good market established right here.

The village finds itself at the beginning of a new year several hundred dollars in debt. We have been spending entirely too much money, and it will only be by the strictest economy that the village can pay all its orders the coming year, The new council have a good chance to become popular by bringing this about. If they will be economical in all expenditures and be careful about contracting new debts it can be done and let us hope it will be done,

An advertisement in any leading paper for 1,000 ablebodied slaves to work without compensation except board and clothes the period of slavery to last one year with privileges of renewal would receive more than 10,000 applicants for the positions—white persons at that. To such a state has our boasted freedom brought us that slavery would be a welcome escape for a million or more of our citizens. In fact, we have all the horrors of slavery, with none of its compensating features of security in food and shelter.—Twentieth Century.

It is now announced that President James J. Hill of the Great Northern railroad has made the necessary arrangements in London by which he will be enabled to immediately carry out his long contemplated plan of completing the branch of the road from Fosston to Duluth. This will give a direct line from the head of the great lakes to the Pacific coast. Such a move will probably compel the Canadian Pacific to extend the Duluth & Winnipeg to the west and connect with the main line at—say Carrington N. D. Competition of this nature will do a great deal to open up and develop the northern part of this state, the resources of which, in timber and minerals are great.—Lumberman.

Hark! Listen fellow citizens. Do you hear the gaunt cry of the starving unemployed reverberating across our land? Good men and pure women are pushing themselves from door to door, everywhere demanding work or bread "What man is there of you whom if his son ask for bread will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish will he give him a serpent?" Would you chain him like a wild beast and force him to penal servitude should he refuse to accept the stone offered by you? Do you realize what 4,000,000 tramping unemployed starving men means? Do you not recognize the fact that self preservation is the first law of nature, and that if men cannot obtain employment that they will beg, steal and murder if necessary to save themselves and their families from a starving death? Do you not know that all the industrial classes will justify and defend them? Do you not know a continuation of this state of affairs will inaugurate a bloody civil war in which neither age nor sex will be spared? Then why do you remain with the political parties that are responsible for the present deplorable condition of the country? Why do you not pull off your party blinds, and abandon your party prejudices and vote with the only party that promises reform, prosperity, contentment, peace and happiness.—Vidette.

Sign Language Useless.

Jones went out to the deaf and dumb asylum on Thursday to inspect the institution. Upon entering, he encountered a man evidently an inmate, and he at once began to explain to the man by making signs upon his fingers that he wanted to look through the place. The man also made signs which Jones could not comprehend.

Then Jones made other and more elaborate motions, which set the man at work with greater violence, and for the next half hour they stood in the hall gesticulating and twisting their fingers without either being able to comprehend what the other meant. Finally Jones became angry, and in an outburst of wrath exclaimed:

"Oh, get out, you idiot! I'm tired of bothering with you."

Thereupon the man said, "That's just what I was going to say about you."

"Oh, you can speak, can you? Then why in thunder didn't you say so and not keep me standing here motioning to you? I thought you were deaf and dumb."

"And I thought you were," said the man.

"I came here to inspect the asylum," said Jones, "and I took you for a patient."

"That's what I came here for, and I thought you were an attendant," said the man.

Here Jones and the man shook hands, hunted up a genuine attendant and went away happy. After this Jones will always use his tongue first, no matter where he is.—Boston Courier.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of five hundred and forty-seven dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John F. Fredrickson mortgagor, to Security Trust Company, of Nashua N. H. mortgagee, bearing date the 29th day of November 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on the 1st day of December 1890, at 10:50 o'clock a. m., in Book 50 of mortgages, on page 101 and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage viz:

The south-east quarter of section five in Township one hundred and fifty-two of Range forty-four in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 28th day of April 1894 at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated March 1 A. D. 1894.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Three hundred and thirty-eight dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Herman Lindner, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Security Trust Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 25th day of August 1892 and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 30th day August 1892 at 10 o'clock a. m. in Book 59 of mortgages on page 155 and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

"The north-east quarter of Section seven, in Township one hundred and fifty, of Range forty-four in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 24th day of March 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt, and interest, and taxes if any on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated January 29th A. D. 1894.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of four hundred and sixty-six dollars which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Joseph Jean and Odile Jean his wife, mortgagors, to Security Trust Company, of Nashua N. H. mortgagee bearing date the 7th day of July 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on the 10th day of July 1890 at 4:20 o'clock p. m. in book 50 of mortgages on page 40. Which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was duly assigned by said Security Trust Company of Nashua N. H., mortgagor, to E. P. Goodsell Jr. by written assignment dated the 22nd day of April 1892 and recorded in the office of said register of deeds on the 4th day of May 1892 at 8.30 o'clock a. m. in book 61 on page 202 and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage viz:

The west half of the west half of Section two in Township one hundred and fifty, of Range forty-two, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances: which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 14th day of April 1894 at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated February 7th A. D. 1894.

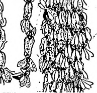
IN THE APIARY.

The Construction of Comb and Hatching of the Honeybee.

The comb consists of hexagonal cells placed end to end in such a manner that each cell is closed by three waxen plates, each of which also assists in completing one of the cells of the other side of the comb. The construction of the comb and the care of the young devolve upon the workers.

In the construction of the comb the bees take hold of each other and suspend themselves in clusters, which consist of festoons, crossing themselves in all directions, and remain immovable for about 24 hours, during which time the wax is secreted in the form of thin plates from between the scales of their bodies. A bee makes its way to the roof of the hive and detaching its plates of wax in succession from the abdomen with the hind legs works them up with the tongue in the material which forms the comb. This bee is followed by others, which perform the work.



BEES SUSPENDED IN CLUSTERS.

As soon as a few cells are thus prepared the queen bee begins to lay her eggs. The first eggs develop into workers; the next produce the drones and also the queens. The eggs are deposited in the cells, and in five days the maggot is hatched. The sole employment of the queen bee is laying these eggs, and as only one is deposited in each cell this occupies her almost incessantly. The queen when thus engaged is accompanied by a guard of 12 workers, who clear the way before her and feed her when exhausted. She lays workers' eggs for 11 months and afterward those which produce drones.

As soon as this change has taken place the workers begin to construct royal cells, in which, without discontinuing to lay the drones' eggs, the queen deposits here and there about once in three days an egg which is destined to produce a queen. The workers' eggs hatch in a few days and produce little white maggots, which immediately open their mouths to be fed. These the workers attend to. In six days each maggot fills up its cell. It is then roofed in by workers, spins a silken cocoon and becomes a chrysalis, and on the twenty-first day it comes forth a perfect bee. The drones emerge on the twenty-fifth day and the queens on the sixteenth.

CELLS CONSTRUCTED BY BEES.

As for nearly a year the queen does not lay any eggs destined to become queens, if any evil befall her in that time the hive is left without a queen. Her loss stops the work of the hive, and unless another queen is provided the bees either join another hive or perish from inanition.

That Big Meteor.

If it was not duly recorded on a ship's log, one would be inclined to class the tale told by the captain and first officer of the steamer Yemassee with the sea serpent yarns. But there it stands in the Yemassee's logbook—the brief note that Dec. 20, 15 miles south of Charleston bar, 40 minutes past 6 in the morning, the captain and his first officer saw "an immense meteor." The meteor lasted entire for 10 minutes, bearing east in a straight line; then for 10 minutes more it wabbled zigzag and at the end of that time burst into a hundred fragments, more or less. It took 10 minutes for the fragments to be used up and disappear, so that the whole phenomenon lasted half an hour. Both the officers vouch for this. The Yemassee is a ship making trips between New York and Charleston.

There is only one point of disagreement between the two men about this monstrous meteor—if it was one. The first officer stakes his reputation for veracity on the size of the thing being equal to at least that of six moons. It must have been as broad as the 30 ton Canadian cheese at the World's fair. The captain is more moderate in his estimate of the size and falls one moon. He says it was as large as five moons. Furthermore, the first officer says its rays burned like those of the hot sun. The fragments after it had burst looked like fireballs.

Here now is a nut for science to crack. Perhaps the phenomenon which the two seamen supposed to be a meteor was an electrical appearance.

Women at the Polls.

"Do unmarried women possess the ballot in this country?" asked the English tourist.

"Not to any great extent," replied the native. "In Wyoming women are allowed to vote, and in a few other states they vote on school questions."

"Don't they vote in Pennsylvania at all?"

"No."

"That's odd. I certainly heard some one speak of the maiden vote the other day."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

ONE BETTER.

Very Good For New York, but Chicago Takes the Palm.

"By the way," said the drummer as he took a cigar out of his case and reached for a match, "this American nation has lost heaps of money by not knowing a good thing when it was crawling around in the grass."

"To what do you refer?" asked the man who had been sharpening his knife on his bootleg.

"To this cigar case. Latest fad out—made of snakeskin and combines beauty and wear. We might have been using that sort of material for the last 200 years, but didn't know a good thing."

"Are you sure it's snakeskin?"

"Of course. Haven't you been in New York lately?"

"No."

"Place on Grand street where they make 'em while you wait. Not only that, but you can pick out your own snake. The day I went in they had about 50 of them in a cage, and I was told to select the one I fancied most. I made my choice, and he was taken out, his skin slipped off, and in about 20 minutes I had this case. Very convenient, don't you know, and it's a strictly New York idea."

"I think we can beat it in Chicago, however," said the other man as he changed his knife to the other bootleg.

"Anything new there?"

"You bet! There's a restaurant on State street where they serve oxtail soup at 10 cents a plate, and they bring in the ox and cut his tail off right before your eyes. In that way there can be no deception. They use about 1,500 tails per day."

"Must make a big lot of bobtailed oxen out your way?"

"Oh, it does."

"And a bobtailed ox is not a thing of beauty."

"By no means, not until he is fixed."

"How fixed?"

"Why, as fast as they leave the restaurant they are taken over to a place on Randolph street and dehorned."

"And then?"

"And then they are sent east and sold as Jersey cows. You get your soup, your horns, your fad and your Jersey cow. All very simple and very convenient, you know, and it's strictly a Chicago idea!"

The man with the snakeskin cigar case sat and thought for awhile with a very serious expression of countenance and then suddenly said:

"I've tried and tried, but it's no use, and I might as well give it up."

"What's that?"

"Lying! The other fellow is always from Chicago and always beats me out of sight!"—Detroit Free Press.

Accounting For It.

The author of "Road, Track and Stable," like every lover of horses, goes about with his eyes open. Often, he confesses, when vexed by some legal problem—for he is a lawyer—he has looked from his office window and envied the teamsters in the street. In particular he has observed a certain negro who drives a very fine pair of jet black horses belonging to a coal merchant. These horses have taken many premiums at horse shows and bear the appropriate names of King Cole and Chloe. Evidently the negro is wrapped up in them. Once or twice at least every year he exhibits them at a show or fair, and on these occasions he has nothing to do except to talk. And I know of no machine that runs more easily and pleasantly than the tongue of a horseman under such circumstances.

I discovered accidentally one day that the very color of the horses is a source of pleasure to him. It was in winter, and the streets were heavy with snow and slush. The team pulled a big load of coal so neatly out of the slough that a bystander was moved to express his admiration at their prowess.

"Huh!" exclaimed the colored man, grinning from ear to ear. "You see, mistah, them horses is black!"—Exchange.

Her Great Desire.

A lady who had reached the time of life when she began to resent every birthday as a personal affront was attending a sewing circle at the parsonage on day when the cry went up that there was a mouse in the room. Every lady in the room except this one fled, screaming. She remained in her chair as pale as death.

Hearing the uproar, the pastor, who was in his study, came in to see what was the matter.

"It's a m-m-mouse!" the pale lady gasped.

"Indeed! And why didn't you run with the rest? Aren't you afraid of mice?"

"I'm mortally afraid of them!"

"Then why, please, did you stay in the room?"

"I was in hopes," the lady faltered, "that I might be scared out of a year's growth."—Youth's Companion.

Mamma's Changing Love.

Small Son—I don't believe mamma loves you any more.

Papa—Oh, I guess she does.

"If she loved you, she wouldn't want to make you unhappy, would she?"

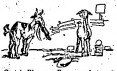
"Of course not."

"Well, she said she was going to tell you to whip me, and you know it always makes you unhappy to have to whip me."—Good News.

Newspaper Item.

"What idiots they have on the newspapers nowadays!" exclaimed Hornblower. "There was a reporter in here yesterday, and I told him about the big improvement I have made down our way. Of course I told him not to mention my name in his paper, and the blamed fool didn't."—Texas Siftings.

His Advances Spurned.



Captain Ricornus—Excuse me, but won't you have a bit of this delicious overshoe?

Miss Nannie Goat—No, thank you. I never chew gum.—Puck.

Not In It.

Madam—Well, Mary, what did you think of the pictures at the academy?

Mary—Oh, mum, there was a picture there called "Two Dogs," after Landseer, but I looked at it for nearly half an hour and I couldn't see no Landseer.—Spare Moments.

The Center of Attraction.

"I guess Dr. Pullteeth, the painless dentist, must advertise a great deal."

"Oh, no. That big crowd you see around his office all the time is attracted by the cries of his patients."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

HOW TO WASH TABLE LINEN.

Care Should Be Used In Washing White, Colored, Embroidered and Damask.

Be sure that your linen goes into no vessel that is not clean and freshly rinsed. See that it is put to boil inside a bag of clean cheese cloth. If stained, wet the spots with alcohol, and wash out in clear cold water before allowing suds to touch it. Stains of milk or soft eggs must be soaked in clear cold water for 10 minutes, then washed out. Use a mild white soap, or the Brown Windsor that comes in long bars. Make a strong lather, only letting the soap touch the fabric at some obstinate grease spot. Tea cloths or others with delicate colors wash brighter if a handful of salt is added to the first suds, which should be barely lukewarm. The second may be hotter. Wash quickly through both. Fold smoothly for the wringer, then pop into your bag and set to boil in cold water for 10 minutes. Rinse first in hot, then in lukewarm water. Have your bluing water cold and free from specks of color. Dip your linen in very thin starch containing a suspicion of bluing, and hang, if possible, in the sun. See that the line is clean. Take pains to hang each piece square, as if dried awry it will be very hard to make it even again.

Let everything dry thoroughly and do not dampen or fold until a little before ironing time. After a cloth is properly wet pull the diagonal corners as hard as possible and fold with a lengthwise crease through the middle. Roll smooth and tight and let it lie for 20 minutes. For rich damask or embroidered cloths put an extra blanket on the ironing table under its muslin cover. Lay the embroidered part smoothly over it, right side down and press with a heavy iron just below scorching heat. When almost dry and very smooth, turn and iron on the right side, using very light irons on the embroidery and heavy ones on the plain round. Stretch the fabric well with the hands before pressing embroidery.

When the right side is properly done, fold it lengthwise along the middle, then begin at one end and lay about six inches lightly over; do not fold it down but roll until all the length is coiled. Go over the cloth twice or thrice with a hot iron, changing irons frequently. Iron till the pattern shows plain on a glossy white surface. If not thoroughly dry when ironed, hang upon the horse for an hour or two, then fold or roll to such compass as required for the closet.

How to Wring Out Hot Wet Flannels.

Put them inside a towel and hold the ends in the hand while wringing. A square bag with a stick run through each end and an opening in the middle of one side is better. Drop the dripping cloth into the bag, then use the stick to turn it by.

How to Care For a Refrigerator.

Place your refrigerator in a cool spot, but one having light and air. Once a week remove everything from it, and take out all shelves or movable parts. Wash these well in hot soapsuds, rinse freely in boiling water. Put them in the sun or before the range to dry. Wash in the same way the rack on which the ice sets, but use greater care, as this is generally corrugated or grooved, and secretions of dirt may be overlooked. Wash the inside of the entire refrigerator with suds and boiling water, being careful to wipe all perfectly dry. Use a flexible wire for running down the tube where the refuse water runs off. Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of washing soda in a quart of boiling water on the stove. After it boils pour it into the ice compartment, follow it quickly with a kettle full of boiling water and wipe dry. Leave the refrigerator open for an hour and then put back your ice and food. The best day in the week for this work is when the iceman is expected. Attend to it immediately after breakfast. Never put warm food in a refrigerator, as it will absorb the flavors of other food, and also heat the refrigerator.

How to Make Paint Shine Without Varnish.

Paint mixed with a liquid composed of one gallon of linseed oil, two ounces each of burnt umber and black lead, and a quarter of a pound of litharge, boiled together, will dry quickly, with a hard finish and a glosslike varnish.

How the Odor of Food May Be Removed From Cooking Vessels.

Sometimes the most careful washing will not wholly remove the flavor or odor of food from the utensil in which it was cooked. This is frequently the case with fish, onions, cabbage, etc., but there is a remedy which, though a little trouble, is well worth trying. After any of these articles have been cooked, wash the utensil carefully with soap and water. Nearly fill it with cold water, and for each quart of water add about a tablespoonful of dissolved washing soda. Place on the fire and let the water get boiling hot. Now turn this water into the sink. Rinse the utensil with clean warm water, and on wiping it dry it will be found perfectly sweet.

How to Prevent Cold Feet.

Do not wear the same stockings on two successive days, but keep two pairs going alternately, hanging each to dry and air when not in use. Every night bathe the feet in tepid water and rub hard with a coarse towel.

How to Make Virginia Eggnog.

To make a gallon of eggnog take one dozen eggs; separate the whites and the yolks very carefully. Beat each until it becomes as light as practicable. Add a pound of pulverized white sugar to the yolks and mix. Then add a quart of cognac brandy and half pint of Jamaica rum, pouring them in a small stream while stirring actively. Add half a gallon of rich milk. Then add not less than three-fourths of the bulk of the whites. The remainder of the whites should be put upon the surface merely as an ornament. A large portion of the white of the eggs should always be mixed to render it light and wholesome.

NORTHWESTERN MILLING.

Flour Output Shows a Slight Increase—A Better Market.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 23.—The flour output showed a small increase last week. The quantity ground was 115,590 barrels, against 108,035 barrels the week before, 163,735 barrels for the corresponding time in 1893, and 171,620 barrels in 1892. Under the stimulus of rather better buying, a larger capacity is moving this week.

Though wheat fluctuated up and down last week, millers held to their prices pretty firmly, and this seemed to inspire buyers to some extent, with the idea that it was time to take hold, and the orders booked in the aggregate were double the amount of flour ground.

Of Superior and Duluth the same paper says: Three of the mills were in operation last week. They produced 34,647 barrels of flour, a daily average of 5,760 barrels, against 7,000 barrels the week before, 1,541 barrels in the corresponding week of 1893, and 12,382 barrels in 1892. This week's output will be somewhat smaller, as only the Lake Superior and Freeman mills will be in operation. They will grind about 4,000 barrels daily. The flour trade is still in no very brilliant condition.

IRON TRADE REVIEW.

A Well Maintained Volume of Business Is Reported.

CLEVELAND, Feb. 23.—The Iron Trade Review this week says:

A well maintained volume of trade is the concurrent report from all the principal iron and steel centers of the country. As to prices there is no betterment, and in some directions an evident weakening. It is clear that the volume of imperative wants in iron and steel, growing out of the long stilling of consumption is steadily increasing, and just as clear that there is no disposition in any department of the trade to buy in advance of what contracts in hand will justify. So much of the every day shipment from furnaces and mills is in response to urgent requests to forward at once, that there is no mistaking the policy of buyers everywhere to govern themselves entirely by events. A two weeks test proved that the advance in soft steel was too rapid for existing conditions, and buyers have slowed up in the past week, with the results that sales of billets at Pittsburg are now reported at $15.50, a decrease of 50 cents from the late quotation of sellers. There is a weakening also in Bessemer pig, though for a fortnight no activity could be affirmed of that market.

A BETTER FEELING.

Railroad Agents In the Northwest Make Optimistic Reports.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 23.—Railroad officials are continually receiving gratifying reports from their local agents on the line regarding business prospects. The Milwaukee passenger department has received 175 letters from as many agents, who wrote in response to a request of Mr. Conley, regarding the present business outlook. Almost all of these are favorable. The agents hold that the depression has reached its lowest ebb and that the flow is about to begin, as seen by a better "feeling" than for some time past.

GULF AND INTERSTATE.

The Executive Board Has Money to Begin Its Construction.

WICHITA, Feb. 23.—The executive board of the Gulf and Interstate road will meet the Arkansas City delegation here. President Stoddard states that the money has been secured from Missouri to start construction, and that "Buffalo" Jones, chief of construction, will start the work of grading in less than three weeks. He does not state who furnishes the money, but officially declares that the road will be under way in less than a month.

Floods In Florida.

PENSACOLA, Fla., Feb. 23.—The steady rains during the past 10 days have caused a freshet in all the streams in this section. News has just been received that the town of Geneva, Ala., on the Choctawhatchie river near the Florida line, is more than half submerged in water, and the river is still rising. The flood at that point is said to be the greatest since the memorable flood in 1865.

Not Credited in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The announcement made in London that Guatemala had suspended payment on its external debt is not credited here, similar reports having been in circulation since the first of the week, and having been authoritatively denied by Minister Guzman, who received a cable from his government saying that the interest on the Guatemalan debt had been punctually paid in London.

Stage Robber Will Die.

DEADWOOD, S. D., Feb. 23.—The Mexican, Wright, who with another Mexican held up the Spearfish mail coach Sunday, has been captured. He was found hiding in a haystack five miles from the scene of the holdup. Both hands and his feet and limbs are badly frozen. He cannot survive.

Jahnn Released on Bail.

ST. CLOUD, Minn., Feb. 23.—The examination of August Jahnn, arrested on the charge of murder in the second degree, was held at Sauk Rapids before Justice Miller. The prisoner was held to the grand jury in $7,000 bail, which was furnished.

Liquor Officially Spilled.

BLITTON, S. D., Feb. 23.—Nine barrels of beer and several bottles of whisky taken from John Grey's blind pig, were, under orders from the court, spilled by the sheriff.

Guatemala Suspends Payment.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—Advices received here from Guatemala announce that the Central American republic has suspended payment, owing to the decline in silver, on its external debt.

OUR QUEER GUEST.

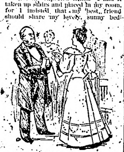
We were spending a pleasant evening in the parlor of my father's handsome country home when the the front doorbell rang and started us all into guessing who our visitor might be.

In spite of my blushing attempt to ridicule the idea it was pretty well settled—by the youngest members of our family, at least—that our caller would prove to be a young man and neighbor, supposed to be deeply in love with me, when our dainty, waiting maid announced a messenger with a telegram.

Of course that unusual event in our rural and sometimes too quiet existence, caused a little commotion, and, as the dispatch was addressed to me, I was watched with curious eyes, while I opened the envelope and read its contents.

"Will start to-morrow to visit you," it said, "have sent trunk to-day," signed "Mary Norton." She was my very dearest girl friend on earth, and had long promised to visit me. The anticipation of her coming made every one so happy that nothing more was said about my "beau," for which I was thankful.

The next afternoon the expressman brought the expected trunk. I had it taken up stairs and placed in my room, for I insisted that my best friend should share my lovely, sunny bedchamber and not be poked away in the cold apartment reserved for ordinary guests.



My Look of Terror Made Him Smile.

After some trouble and complaining, for the trunk was unusually large and heavy, the expressman, helped by our gardener, carried it up and set it against the foot of my bed, there to wait for its beloved owner.

As I have mentioned, our house and grounds were large and handsome, for my father, being rich, prided himself on maintaining a home befitting a country gentleman. We also possessed much jewelry and other rare treasures and, for fear of robbers, our house was well protected without by dogs and within by bolts and bars with electric alarms at each door and window. In addition we all had large dinner bells by our bedsides to ring furiously in case of necessity, and the male portion of the family had no end of guns and handy pistols.

Consequently, on the following morning when we discovered that we had been robbed during the night, we were frightened and shocked beyond measure.

Almost every room had been entered and nearly all our jewelry was gone. Even watches from under pillows and pocketbooks from father's and brother's trousers had been taken.

And most puzzling and alarming of all was the fact that not the slightest sign of breaking in or out could be found at a single door or window. The electric contrivances were all undisturbed.

Who could have done the robbery? We couldn't suspect our servants of any share in the crime, for long years of faithful duty proved the contrary. If a burglar had secreted himself in the house before closing time, which seemed probable, how could he have gotten out and left no trace? The more we tried to solve the riddle the more mysterious it became to us, though the village constable, hastily sent for, said he'd soon have a theory to work on.

In the afternoon of that awful day another telegram came to our house from Mary Norton. It read: "Mother suddenly ill. Cannot come. Will send for trunk. Please deliver to expressman when he calls. Will write particulars."

In an hour following that came the expressman and, glad that Mary was to be spared the unpleasantness of a visit at such a forlorn time, we again let our man help him away with the heavy trunk from its place at the foot of my bed.

For a week we did our best, assisted, too, by city detectives, to discover a clue to the robbers, but all in vain.

And every day we sent to the postoffice for my friend's promised letter, but none came. Then, anxious for fear her mother was seriously ill, I wrote to her. By return mail came an answer, saying she had sent neither trunk nor telegrams, that her mother was not sick, and asking what it all meant.

At once I understood our robbery. The burglar had been in the trunk when it came, he had passed the night, save when he was making the round of the house, in my room when I was alone; then with his valuable plunder he had been shipped away in his queer hiding place. No wonder the trunk was heavy and big. No doubt from peepholes in it the robber had watched me until certain I was sound asleep. Then out he must have crept, and—the thought made me shudder and feel faint.

But, though we admired the cunning and bold trick, we immediately set about tracing the trunk to where it went after leaving our house.

The expressman whom we found to be honest and unsuspicious in the matter, had given it to the railroad which, on telegraphic orders, had forwarded it to an adjacent city. There it was called for and taken away by a drayman who likely was an accomplice of the burglar, for no one at the station knew him and nothing further could be learned regarding the trunk, at least for the time being.

Now comes the strangest and most incredible part of my story.

Some months after our robbery I was on a week's visit at my uncle's house in a distant town. Like my father's it was spacious, and showed evidence of the wealth it contained.

One evening after supper and while we were gathered in the parlor a telegram was brought in and handed to my Cousin Alice. Of course my detective curiosity was aroused at the similarity of the event and when it turned out to be almost identical in its reading with the one sent to me the night before the burglary, I instantly knew what was coming. So did the rest, for they, as you may guess, were not ignorant of the affair.

For some moments we gazed at each other in speechless astonishment. Then Uncle John, bound to joke, no matter what happened, asked me with mock seriousness if I would like the expected trunk set in my room, which, being the guest chamber, was the right place for it.

My look of terror made him smile in spite of his straight face.

"No! No!" I gasped. "I should die at sight of it. O Uncle John, do send for the police at once. I'm sure we'll all be murdered in our sleep."

"Yes, but we want to trap your burglar friend," he laughed, "and may be recover your jewels. However, if you are so unhospitable, perhaps Alice will take the stranger in."

But Alice, with a face more scared than mine, declared positively that she wouldn't.

"Well, then, I will do the honors," said Uncle, glancing mischievously at his frightened wife.

"John! you shall do no such thing," spoke up auntie, with a trembling voice "I'll have the trunk thrown down the well as soon as it arrives. No burglar, dead or alive, comes into my room. The idea!"

Finally we settled down to business and fixed on a plan to catch the coming burglar red-handed and without any danger to ourselves.

Early next morning I moved from the guest chamber to room with Cousin Alice. Then my deserted apartment had its windows securely barred, so that our expected guest could not escape through them should he feel so inclined. And its door was fixed to be strongly bolted from outside, in the hall. Some old watches and jewelry of small value were carelessly left on the dressing-case to tempt the rascal and keep him in innocence of our crafty scheme.

Several well-armed men were to be stationed quietly in and about the house, to do whatever fighting might be necessary, though our plan was to let the burglar rest in fancied peace if possible. Then, after his departure in the trunk, we were to follow and capture his pals in the city, and so recover the previously stolen articles.

'Tis needless to mention our excitement, of waiting all the next day for the trunk, or our scarcely concealed agitation when, toward evening, it arrived.

Uncle John himself, loudly proclaiming his gladness at the pleasure of the visit it promised, helped the unsuspecting expressman up the broad staircase and carefully left it in the guest-chamber, right side up and where it could be observed from the hall by peeping through the key-hole of the well fastened door.

Before dark I mustered courage enough to steal in stockinged feet to the key-hole and peep in.

Yes, the trunk was the very one I had entertained, and even sat on in my room at home, with never a thought of its horrid occupant. Ugh! The sight of it sent chills through me and aroused a feeling on my scalp, as if my hair was trying to erect itself. Hastily I ran away from that worse than Blue Beard chamber, and never stopped shivering till supper was over.

You may be sure no eyes were closed in the house that night. The men guarding the hall heard the knob of the prison-room door softly tried, but, of course, it didn't open, which was lucky for the rascal within.

At last daylight came and relieved us of some of our awful suspense. After breakfast Uncle John noiselessly unbolted the door and, carelessly humming a tune and concealing a handy weapon, entered the room. The trunk stood just as it was left the evening before. But the jewelry and stuff had disappeared from the dressing-case.

When brave uncle John returned to us to report his eyes shone with a hunter's delight. His game was trapped and ready to be bagged when the time came.

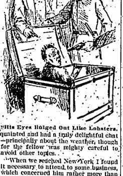
Just before dinner the other telegram, almost a duplicate of mine arrived, and after it the expressman for the trunk. Again uncle and the still unsuspicious man lifted the burglar's receptacle and placed it on the wagon to go to the railroad station.

Then, as we watched it driven away with uncle and a pair of constables following in a buggy, we dared speak above a whisper.

The rest of the story uncle told us on the following day, when he came home safely from his hazardous trip.

"At the station," he said, "we found a nice-looking, respectable chap waiting. When the trunk appeared he paid the expressman and checked the trunk through to New York, to which place I bought my ticket, and, also, telegraphed on for city police detectives to meet me on arrival of the train.

"When the trunk was placed in the baggage part of the smoking car its owner got on board and took his seat among the smokers. As innocent as a babe I plumped down beside him and in a right friendly way offered him a cigar, which, like a gentleman, he accepted. Then, pulling our cigars, together as you please, we soon got acquainted and had a truly delightful chat—principally about the weather, though for the fellow was mighty careful to avoid other topics.



His Eyes Bulged Out Like Lobsters.

"When we reached New York I found it necessary to attend to some business, which concerned him rather more than he thought, so shaking hands 'goodbye' and expressing a hope to become better acquainted, I left him watched by my town constables while I sought my smarter city detectives and put them onto him.

"His drayman was on hand waiting near the baggage-room. As soon as he got the trunk on his cart he drove off a ways, my smoking friend was neatly 'collared and cuffed' and marched in an opposite direction between two valiant policemen. Then the detectives and myself took a cab and started after the trunk.

"Through streets becoming dirtier and wickeder we followed, without attracting suspicion from the drayman, until he stopped before an apparently unoccupied house and prepared to unload. Ere he could do so one detective jumped on his cart, and without speaking started his horse ahead again. The other, aided by me, grabbed the fellow and prevented him from making an outcry to alarm his pal in the trunk. Immediately several policemen who I didn't know were following behind suddenly appeared and burst into the house which turned out to be a 'fence' for the thieves.

"Leaving our surprised drayman in charge of some of the officers we reseated ourselves in the cab and again followed the trunk to a police stationhouse, into which it was carried and placed in front of the captain's desk on the floor.

"Then silently we awaited results. It was dusk, and as no lights were yet burning to let our game see where he was we rightly supposed he would think himself safe at home and act accordingly. Prepared to turn on the gas full blaze when he did so, we watched the trunk. For perhaps fifteen anxious minutes it seemed lifeless. Then we heard a movement inside, heard a bolt drawn and saw the lid slowly rise and a head cautiously appear. Up went the gas and over went the trunk's lid, pulled by an armed officer. At first the head, or its face rather, wore a happy, triumphant, broad grin; then as things didn't look familiar its eyes opened wider in an effort to understand matters, while the grin faded away like the rainbow. Then, as the facts of the case forced themselves on the burglar's startled brain the poor fellow's hair straightened, his eyes bulged out like a lobster's and the astonishment and terror depicted on his youthful but evil features beat acting all hollow.

"'Come out of that, you scamp!' shouted the police captain as soon as he could talk for laughing, 'and give an account of yourself. What's the name of this particular racket, anyhow?'

"The burglar tried to laugh also, but it was a dismal failure. 'Oh, that's all right,' he grinned, 'I took yez for the conductor. That's why I was scared. Yer see, I've been beating the railroad, boss! 'Taint every chap kin git ahead of old Vanderbilt and Chauncey Deepue. But don't tell 'em, kors they'll be a-opening all the trunks on the line and the wimmin might object. Ha, ha, ha! Say, purty slick trick, wasn't it?'

"The burglar's bluff was good, but it didn't work for a cent.

"'What yer doing with those watches in the trunk?' asked a policeman as he fished them out after the fellow had painfully managed to crawl out himself.

"'Seein' if the road runs on time, boss. The blamed train was ten minutes late and I'm goin' to report it. Say, yer hain't got a swaller of whisky yer could lend a tired traveler, hey? Couldn't get at the water cooler, yer know.'

"'Well, you'll have no trouble getting at the "cooler" now. Lock him up, sergean. We'll give him another free trip to-morrow.'

"Off to the cell they took the wretch, and then we examined his trunk. It was padded inside, so that being tossed about by baggage-smashers couldn't hurt. There were pockets made to button in the lining, but only a couple were filled with his plunder. Some empty flasks and crumbs of food we found. In the bottom and sides were ventilating and peepholes. A man might live a week in that trunk, I think, if his provisions held out."

In a week or so I received a notice to appear in a New York court to give my testimony and identify the things stolen at my own home, most of which we recovered. I saw the trunk again, and its occupant, but I guess he knew me better than I did him.

THE ELK PLAYED POSSUM.

A Surprise Awaited the Hunter Who Started In to Skin the Beast.

"An elk beats the devil for mischief," said James Gourley to a writer for the New York Sun. "One time I was hunting on the Yellowstone river with Uncle Pete McDougall and a squaw man named Jackson, and every kind of game that you ever saw was found there. We shot no end of buffalo, deer and antelope, and thought the list complete when we struck a band of elk in the open valley. The squaw man said that the only way to kill an elk was to bury yourself in a clump of bushes and wait for him to come to you. I knew better, and so we herded up the group and tried to close in on them in a circle. Well, they all got away except one bull, who was cornered until I could get a shot at him. I was flattering myself that it was a great shot when I saw him fall flat on his side and never move a hair.

"'You know all about killing elk,' I said, sarcastic like, to the squaw man.

"'You killed him, you skin him,' he said.

"'All right,' said I, 'but you don't get any of the meat.' And with that I out with my knife and walked quickly over to the dead elk, never noticing where he was hit. I got square over on his neck, and was just reaching with my knife to take the skin from his head when of all surprises I ever got that was the worst. The bull elk just raised up in the air with me on his neck, and tossing his head, caught me squarely on his horns. I came down like a piece of lead ore in a thousand-foot shaft. I tried to hank onto his horns, but he jerked my grip away and threw me high in the air and on the ground, where I lay with the breath knocked out of me and too scared to move and thinking he would trample me to death in the sage brush. Finally my friends got in their work. The elk had so much fun that he did not see them coming, and Uncle Pete put a ball in his heart just as the beast was about to jump on me with all four feet. The elk tumbled over on me, and under his crushing weight I fainted. The next I remembered was the smell of smuggled Canada whisky and the squaw man saying with a laugh:

"'It takes a long time to learn an elk's ways.'

"Like Gen. Grant in the interview, I had nothing to say on the subject."

The Grocer Did Not Advertise.

A few days ago a Pittsburg citizen cut into a pound of butter which he had purchased at a grocery whose proprietor does not advertise and found therein a small tin box which contained a piece of paper bearing the following, written in a neat feminine hand:

"I am a girl 18 years, good-looking and an excellent housekeeper. Should this be found by some unmarried Christian gentleman will he please write to the following address," etc.

The finder, being a bachelor, decided to unravel the affair and succeeded only to destroy the romance. The girl who had written the note had died many years ago, leaving an aged husband and a grown family.—Pittsburg Messenger.

Medical writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application and one that will reach the remote sores and ulcerated surfaces. The history of the efforts to treat catarrh is proof positive that only one remedy has completely met these conditions, and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This safe and pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as nothing else has ever done, and both physicians and patients freely concede this fact.

MEN'S SOCIETY CLOTHES.

What They Should Wear When They Go Out on Pleasure Bent.

Women generally know how to dress themselves and their children for most of the "functions" of society. But they are often sadly perplexed as to how their husbands should be attired. Beyond knowing that men should not wear evening clothes before 6 o'clock, their ideas on masculine garb are vague. As they frequently have to decide the question of what their lords and masters shall wear, it would be wise for them to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest the following facts:

At 2 o'clock weddings, known as morning weddings—which are about the the only early festivities to which a man can be dragged—the bridegroom wears dark-striped trousers, double-breasted frock coat, undressed pearl-grey gloves, white four-in-hand, tall hat and big boutonniere. The ushers are similarly attired, and the masculine wedding guests who aim to be correct, wear clothes of the same general fashion; though, of course, the style of their ties, gloves and boutonnieres is not prescribed by law. At all fashionable morning affairs this uniform, with some individual variations, is correct.

In the evening, of course, evening clothes are necessary. This season prescribes a three-button plain shirt front, a straight stand-up collar, either a black cloth waistcoat or a double-breasted, four-button white one. No jewelry is worn, and pearl-grey gloves, stitched with black, are considered in bad taste, as are patent leather shoes.

Two Conscientious Monks.

Here is a story of a conscientious friar which is certainly very amusing. It appears that two monks, the one a Dominican and the other a Franciscan, were traveling together when they came to a river. The Dominican said to his companion that as he walked barefooted, he was bound by the rules of his order to carry him, and if he refused he would commit a great sin. The Franciscan yielded to this representation, and took the other friar on his back. When they had got to the middle of the ford the Franciscan asked the other if he had any money about him.

"Yes," replied the latter, "I have two rials."

"I beg a thousand pardons, my father," replied the disciple of St. Francis, "but my order forbids me to carry money."

And with these words he flopped his rider into the water.

THOUGHT HE WAS A WOMAN.

Why Mgr. Lavigerie's Face is Now Adorned by a Flowing Beard.

An interesting story is told by the New York Tribune regarding the reasons which led Cardinal Lavigerie to allow his great beard to grow, to which it has been said, much of his authority in Africa is due. When the famous prelate arrived at Algiers to take up his duties of archbishop he saw with regret that the faces of all the priests were covered with hair. At the reception of the clergy the cardinal showed his displeasure at this, and virtually ordered them to visit the barber at once. There was great excitement among the long-bearded priests, who disliked to sacrifice the facial ornaments, which were their chief pride. But Pater Girard, the popular superior of the seminary in Algiers and the possessor of the most lombard like beard, calmed them by saying he would persuade the cardinal to rescind his order. On the day following the prelate's arrival in Algiers Pater Girard accompanied him on his first official journey. As they arrived in a village inhabited exclusively by native Africans the oldest inhabitants, who had long known the superior came to pay their respects to the prince of the church. They looked with surprise on the freshly shaven face of the cardinal, and a lively conversation followed, accompanied by gestures illustrative of astonishment.

"What are they saying?" asked Cardinal Lavigerie, with impatience.

"Oh," answered Pater Girard, pretending to be greatly embarrassed, "they are great children! You need pay no attention to their nonsensical talk."

"But tell me, as I should like to know," continued the cardinal unable to suppress his interest and curiosity.

"Well," came the reply, "they cannot understand why a man shaves himself. They think you are a woman, and a very beautiful one."

It need hardly be added that the archbishop of Algiers allowed his priests to retain their long beards. Indeed, a few months later the cardinal himself appeared with a great beard, which soon became known throughout the northern part of Africa.

it had cured her of dyspepsia. She had been troubled with that complaint since childhood, and since her cure she has never been without a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla in the house. We commenced giving it to Sarah about one year ago, and it has conquered the running sore.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, March 13.—Mr. Blanchard, the newly appointed senator from Louisiana, was presented to the senate at the opening of that body to-day, and took the oath of office. The resolution of Senator Peffer calling for an investigation as to senators speculating in Wall street was, on motion of Mr. Gorman, laid on the table by a vote of 33 to 27. The seigniorage bill was then taken up and Mr. Vilas resumed his speech in opposition to the measure. Mr. Allison of Iowa made the speech which he was not well enough to deliver last Friday.

The day in the house was devoted entirely to the consideration of a bill relating to the extension of the time for allowing a street railroad company in this city to change its system of motive power.

Washington, March 14.—The proceedings in the senate yesterday were of an extremely uninteresting character. Without the intervention of any morning business, except the presentation of a few petitions and the introduction of some unimportant bills, the senate took up the consideration of the seigniorage bill. Senators Stewart and Lindsay spoke in favor and Mr. Dolph spoke in opposition to it, holding that its passage would destroy the existing equality between gold and silver, and the two new senators, Mr. McLaurin of Mississippi and Mr. Blanchard of Louisiana received their committee appointments. Mr. Stewart of Nevada took the floor in support of the Bland bill.

The house yesterday began the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the government, and fair progress was made. Only three amendments of any importance were adopted—one appropriating $43,500 for lighting Hay lake channel, another of $64,000 for the public building at Buffalo and another of $90,000 for repairing the postoffice at New York.

Washington, March 15.—The test vote which was to be taken to-day on the seigniorage bill—the vote on Mr. Allison's motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed the third reading—had the effect of attracting a large attendance to the gallery. The senate early took up the consideration of the bill, and Mr. Teller of Colorado and Mr. George of Mississippi spoke in favor of its passage, the former criticising severely some statements made by Senator Sherman in his recent speech against the bill. Before Mr. George had concluded his remarks the hour for a vote arrived and Mr. Harris insisted upon the vote being then taken on Mr. Allison's motion, with the result that it was defeated by 28 to 45. It is expected that the bill will pass by about the same vote to-morrow. Mr. Manderson moved then to commit the bill to the finance committee, and this motion was also defeated by a vote of 27 to 44. The vote in detail is as follows on Mr. Allison's motion:

Ayes—Aldrich, Allison, Brice, Caffery, Carey, Chandler, Cullom, Davis, Frye, Gallinger, Hale, Hawley, Hoar, Lodge, McMillan, McPherson, Manderson, Mitchell (Wis.), Morrill, Palmer, Proctor, Quay, Smith, Stockbridge, Vilas, Wilson, Washburn—28.

Nays—Allen, Bate, Berry, Blackburn, Blanchard, Butler, Call, Camden, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Dubois, Faulkner, Gibson, Gordon, Hansbrough, Harris, Hill, Irby, Jones (Ark.), Kyle, Lindsay, Martin, Mills, Mitchell (Or.), Morgan, Murphy, Pasco, Peffer, Perkins, Pettigrew, Power, Pugh, Ransom, Roach, Shoup, Squire, Stewart, Teller, Turpie, Vest Voorhees, White, Wolcott—45.

The house is making wonderful progress with the sundry civil bill. To-day forty pages of the bill were disposed of making in all eighty-three in two days, and leaving sixteen pages more exclusive of two paragraphs, those relating to the coast and geodetic surveys and the Missouri river commission, which were passed over temporarily. No amendments of importance were adopted to-day although the Northwestern members made a vigorous effort to increase the amount for the survey of public lands. The appropriation for the geological survey which usually encounters bitter opposition, to-day passed unchallenged, the amount appropriated being $414,000.

Washington, March 16.—The seigniorage bill has passed the senate—44 to 31. The following is the detailed vote:

Yeas—Allen, Bate, Berry, Blackburn, Blanchard, Butler, Call, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Dubois, Faulkner, George, Gordon, Hansbrough, Harris, Hunton, Irby, Jones (Ark.), Kyle, Lindsay, McLaurin, Martin, Mills, Mitchell (Or.), Morgan, Pasco, Peffer, Perkins, Pettigrew, Power, Pugh, Quay, Turpie, Vest, Voorhees, White, Wolcott—44.

Nays—Aldrich, Allison, Brice, Caffery, Carey, Chandler, Cullom, Davis, Dolph, Frye, Gallinger, Gibson, Gorman, Hale, Hawley, Higgins, Lodge, McMillan, McPherson, Manderson, Mitchell (Wis.), Morrill, Murphy, Palmer, Platt, Proctor, Smith, Stockbridge, Vilas, Washburn, Wilson—31.

Friends of the bill say President Cleveland will sign it, while others claim that it will be vetoed.

The senate also passed the bill to amend an act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge over the Missouri river at Sioux City. The amendment extends the time for the construction of the bridge until March 2, 1896. A charter was also granted the Iowa & Nebraska Pontoon Bridge company, authorizing it to build a bridge across the Missouri river near Sioux City, Iowa, and then after an executive session of thirty-five minutes the doors were reopened and the senate took from the calendar and passed a bill granting to the Duluth & Winnipeg Railroad company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations in Minnesota. Bills to extend the time for completing a bridge across the Missouri river between Kansas City and the town of Sibley, Mo., and granting right of way to the Duluth & Manitoba Railroad company across the Fort Pembina reservation in North Dakota were passed, and the senate adjourned until Monday.

The house put in the day discussing and amending the sundry civil bill.

Washington, March 17.—Senators representing both the Democratic and Republican sides of the senate committee on finance expressed the opinion at the close of the committee meeting to-day that the tariff bill would be reported to the senate on Tuesday. They stated, however, that no agreement to this effect had been entered into, but that the opinion was the result of a knowledge of the progress that had been made upon the bill since the full committee has been in possession of it. The entire time of the meeting was devoted to the point relating to collecting the revenue in both the tariff and the internal revenue reports, but it was announced at the close that this part of the work had been practically completed. Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Hamblin was again with the committee for the purpose of making suggestions, and answering questions as to the operation of various provisions of the bill bearing upon its administration by the department. The appearances now are that the bill will have quite a large number of changes which they will agree upon. These changes will include the transfer of a number of articles to the free list which were made dutiable in the senate bill before the sugar duty had been agreed upon. The treasury department estimates make it appear that the bill will have a larger revenue than would be needed by the government, which will afford the committee an opportunity to make a greater number of articles free than would have been possible if the sugar duty had not been imposed.

Washington, March 19.—The house today resumed consideration of the sundry civil bill. When this is disposed of, which will probably be done to-night, the house will take up the four contested election cases which are pending — the O'Neil-Joy case from the Tenth Missouri district; the Williams-Settle case, from the Fifth North Carolina; the English-Hilborn case, from the Third California, and the Whatley-Cobb case from the Fifth Alabama. The O'Neil-Joy and English-Hilborn cases, which were both decided against the sitting members (Republicans) by a strict party vote in the committee on elections, are the most important and will require the major portion of the time.

The senate devoted itself to routine business of no general interest. It is probable that the fortifications appropriation bill will be reported from the committee, and if it should be it will probably be taken up for discussion and put upon its passage. For the rest, there will be an effort to dispose of the government printing site, the Russian thistle appropriation, and the McGarrahan bill, and of a large number of special bills on the calendar.

Lamps Flew.

Fergus Falls, Minn., March 19.—Hon. Thomas Cole was playing whist with a party of comrades in the G. A. R. post ante room when trouble arose because the janitor, Comrade Charles Knapp, who was cleaning up, wanted a door opened, which Cole wanted closed on account of the draft. Cole finally struck Knapp. The latter, who is decrepit, retreated to the side of the ante room where the lamps sat, and, seizing one, hurled it at Cole. It struck him full in the face, breaking, and cutting him badly. Before he could rally, Knapp placed the second lamp with equally telling effect, gashing his neck fearfully. This was followed by a third, which also hit him on the head. This exhausted the lamps and Cole, who had now reached Knapp, struck him a blow which nearly felled him. Knapp, however, escaped out of the hall and swore out a warrant for Cole's arrest. In the meantime Cole went to a doctor's office, where it was found that he was badly cut with the glass, several arteries being severed. Cole bled so profusely that the doctor said he could not accompany the officer.

A Profitable Grain Palace.

Aberdeen, S. D., March 19.—The president and secretary of the interstate grain palace made a statement to the stockholders to-day of the financial condition of the corporation at this time. In addition to the building free from debt, the association has $277.54 on hand, after all debts are paid. The building, which has been used for a number of large gatherings this winter, makes the largest and most convenient assembly room in the state, and will be the most commodious room for political gatherings for years to come. The palace will again be used next fall for the purpose for which it was built, the exposition of the products of North and South Dakota. Already many improvements are contemplated.

Warm March Day.

St. Paul, March 19.—The thermometer at the weather bureau Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock registered 75 degrees in the shade, which was the maximum point reached. This is the highest temperature ever experienced in Minnesota in March since the establishment of the weather bureau in this part of the country and since any official record has been kept of the weather. In fact, old Sol outdid himself by creating a temperature higher by 7 degrees than in any March previous. The highest temperature ever registered in March before was in 1879 on the 27th, when the mercury stood at 68 degrees. The next highest point reached was 64 degrees in March, 1874, on the 23d and 26th. Last year on St. Patrick's day the thermometer was only 35 degrees above zero and the snow was still on the ground.

Yeomans the Man.

Washington, March 19.—The president will appoint an interstate commerce commissioner to succeed Judge McDill, deceased, early this week. The chances are thought to be all in favor of the selection of State Senator J. D. Yeomans of Sioux City, Iowa, who formerly lived in Buffalo. Mr. Yeomans' supporters came from Illinois, Iowa and New York, and they embrace, besides both parties in the legislature of Iowa, and the leading railroads of the state, Illinois and Western New York. If Mr. Yeomans is appointed he will be the first railroad man ever appointed on the commission. All the others have been lawyers.

The Masons Get It.

St. Paul, March 19.—Judge Oliver has decided that in bequeathing $10,000 to the St. Paul Masonic Building association, the late Commodore Kittson had in mind the St. Paul Masonic Temple association, which will consequently receive the bequest. The matter had to be decided by the court as there was no organization in St. Paul known as the Masonic Building association.

Rocks Thrown.

Sheboygan, Wis., March 19.—A. P. A. Sims addressed a large crowd last night. A crowd gathered and a few rocks were thrown. Nobody was hurt.

KILLED BY A WOMAN.

AN ATROCIOUS CRIME UNEARTHED BY LONDON POLICE.

An Abandoned Woman Entices an Old Man Into Her Room and After Killing Him Places His Mutilated Body in a Trunk.

London, March 19.—This city has for a comparatively long time been exempt from murder, but to-day a sensation was caused by the discovery of a crime that in its details somewhat resembles the notorious Gouffe murder that occurred some time ago in Paris. The scene of this latest horror was in Grafton street, in the Soho district, which is infested with foreigners of the lowest class. It was in the immediate vicinity of the house in which the murder was committed that the police recently raided the anarchists clubs. An Austrian woman named Marie Hermann who is well known to the police as a night prowler, recently rented a small room in a house on Grafton street. On Thursday night last she, in company with an elderly man was seen to enter the room. Subsequently loud quarrelling was heard in the room by other tenants in the house, but as wordy wars were of frequent occurrence, no attention was paid to this. A woman named Hutchins, who lodged with the Hermann woman on Friday found blood stains on a sink, and spoke to the Hermann woman about them. The latter passed the matter off lightly, but on Saturday she changed her lodgings, taking better apartments in Marylebone street. She took with her a heavy trunk which she asked should be carefully handled. The police were notified and officers were sent to the house on Marylebone street where the Hermann woman had taken up her residence and search made of the apartments occupied by her. The trunk which the woman had been so careful about, was in the room. The police forced it open and found in it the body of the missing man. His head had been battered, evidently with some blunt instrument. The body presented a frightful appearance, and the clothing in which it was attired was drenched with blood. The Hermann woman was at once taken into custody on a charge of wilful murder. The body has been recognized as that of a well-to-do ex-job master named Stevens. He was seventy-six years old.

THE POLLARD CASE.

Col. Breckinridge Will Testify in His Own Behalf.

Washington, March 19.—The legal complications and moral side issues of the Breckinridge case which are gradually coming to light as the trial progresses increase the public interest here in Washington where the Kentucky orator is best known and make it the most sensational scandal ever reviewed in the criminal courts here. Curiosity is rampant among lawyers as to the line of defense which the array of five able lawyers retained by the congressman have marked out for him. For a time after the revelation of the secret marriage of Col. Breckenridge to Mrs. Wing in New York on April 29 was made public, it was the general opinion that this circumstance would form the basis of the defense, but to-day the attorneys for Mr. Breckinridge have intimated to the contrary. Even had they not said so it is a fact that all the promises of marriage alleged by Miss Pollard to have been made to her, except the statements in the presence of Maj. Moore, were before the date of the clandestine marriage. Moreover, it seems to be established by a preponderance of the authorities that the promise to marry made by a married man, furnishes ground for a breach of promise action in case it is accepted in good faith by the other party, who is ignorant of his legal disability to fulfill the contract. The mystery of the defense will be solved in a few days, however, for it is the present intention to place Col. Breckinridge on the witness stand as the first witness in his own behalf.

Permitted to Drown.

San Francisco, March 19.—Mrs. Mollie Martin, wife of a saloonkeeper, her daughter Ora, aged six, and Miss Nellie McCarthy, who lived with the Martins, were drowned in the bay by the capsizing of a yacht. They were out on a pleasure trip with Peter Thornburg, a Swedish sailor. The latter gave the tiller to Mrs. Martin while he adjusted the sails. She was inexperienced, threw the boat too close to the wind and it turned over. All managed to hold on to the overturned boat which drifted with the ebb of the tide past the British ship Mary Down. Thornburg claims their cries for assistance were heard but the officers refused to lower a boat, throwing out a life buoy instead. The women, exhausted, finally loosened their holds and sank. Thornburg was rescued after being two hours in the water.

Town Plundered.

St. Louis, March 19.—A special to the Republic from Chattanooga, Tenn., says: A telegram received by Chief of Police Hill from Ooltewah, Tenn., says that every store in the town was robbed last night, and asking that men and bloodhounds be sent to trace the robbers. Officers were at once sent with dogs and mounted horses to scour the intervening country. Ooltewah is the county seat of James county, and is fourteen miles from this city. The place has seven stores. The thieves looted each store systematically and loaded the booty on wagons. At one store they blew open the safe, but as the town has no officers their work was not discovered until morning.

Transborder Gold Craze.

Winnipeg, March 19.—Encouraged by the increasing richness of the ore in the main land of the Sultana at Rat Portage, near the Rainy river district, the proprietors have determined to increase the output and capacity of the plant. Two car loads of machinery are now en route to the mine, and when these are placed in position milling operations will be resumed. Meantime the quality of ore being mined is highly satisfactory.

Insane on a Train.

Laramie, Wyo., March 19—John O'Neil of Napa, Cal., became demented on the east-bound Union Pacific train yesterday and was placed in a hospital here. He had a through ticket to Dublin, Ireland, and also a draft on the Bank of Dublin for £80, besides about $160 in currency. It is thought excessive drinking and the high altitude caused him to become crazy.

Died of Consumption.

Kirkhoven, Minn., March 19.—Dr. E. B. Croner died of consumption in Colorado.

DIED SUDDENLY.

Mrs. John W. Noble, Wife of the Ex-Secretary, is Dead.

Washington, March 19.—Mrs. John W. Noble, wife of ex-President Harrison's secretary of the interior, died suddenly at her home in this city yesterday. The end of life came to her while standing in her dining room chatting with female friends and waiting for Gen. Noble, who had stepped from the room to call a carriage for a drive. She complained suddenly of dizziness, her maid caught her as she was falling, and before she could be taken to a couch she was dead. The cause of death was organic heart disease, regarding which she had been warned by eminent physicians, and which disease both her parents died. Mrs. Noble was Miss Elizabeth Halstead, and daughter of Rev. Dr. Halstead of Northampton, Mass. She was fifty-six years of age, having been born in June, 1837. She was one of six children, all the rest being still alive. She met Gen. Noble while on a visit to Keokuk, Iowa, where he, then a soldier, was stationed, early in the late war. They were married Feb. 6, 1864, and during the remaining days of the contest she was at the front with her husband, seeing service around Chattanooga and Memphis. After the war she came to St. Louis with Gen. Noble, and here they have since lived, except during her husband's term as secretary of the interior. She leaves no children, two born to her having died early. Mrs. Noble has been a leader during her life in this city in charitable work, and movements for the advancement of her sex.

HIS NARROW ESCAPE.

Thrilling Experience of a Carpenter in Chicago.

Chicago, March 19.—People in the vicinity of a new grain elevator in process of erection at South Chicago were horrified to see Joseph Coates, a carpenter, slip on the roof and slide rapidly to the edge. As he was going over the edge Coates grabbed a wall plate with his right hand and hung to it, his body being suspended at a height of 100 feet. Coates' eight fellow workmen were paralyzed with fright, and two of them fainted. Others soon recovered their senses and set about to rescue the man. All this time Coates was crying out to those in sound of his voice to save him. In the course of a few seconds the horror-stricken watchers on the bridge below saw a man appear at a window, and behind him were several other men. The first comer leaned far out until it seemed as if he would tumble headlong from the hole, but strong hands and a stout rope about his body held him securely while he reached out and grasped the man hanging from the wall plate and succeeded in getting him to the window ledge. Then with an almost superhuman effort both men were dragged through the window by the rescuers inside. The rescued man, when he found himself saved, fell over in a dead faint, and the rescuer, William Jones, another carpenter, collapsed completely. Coates, when he was finally revived was in such a nervous condition that he had to be assisted home by two of his fellow workmen.

DA GAMA ESCAPES.

The Brazilian Insurgent and His Officers Now Safe at Sea.

(Copyright, 1894, by Associated Press).

Rio Janeiro, March 19.—Judging from the course of events here it is thought by impartial observers that the Portuguese government does not intend to honor the request made upon it for the surrender of Admiral Da Gama. Da Gama took refuge on the Portuguese corvette Mindello when the insurrection collapsed. President Peixoto demanded that the admiral and the officers with him be delivered into his hands. The Portuguese minister declined to order the Portuguese commander to surrender the fugitive, and yesterday afternoon the Mindello and the Albuquerque, another Portuguese warship, having on board Admiral Da Gama and seventy of his officers, put to sea. It had been thought in some quarters that if the vessels attempted to leave the bay with the fugitives on board, trouble would ensue. There was not, however, the slightest opposition made to their departure, and as a matter of fact trouble from this source was never probable. The destination of the warships is unknown. It is conjectured that they will go south to Montevideo and land the insurgent officers there. If they are landed at Montevideo they can easily, if they are so disposed, join the insurgents in Sao Paulo and Rio Grande do Sul, who are still in armed opposition to the government.

Depot Destroyed.

Denver, March 19. — The handsome union depot at the foot of Seventeenth street, covering two blocks from Sixteenth street to Eighteenth street, was burned in the early hours yesterday morning. The fire started in the attic of the west wing from the electric light wires, and at the very moment when it seemed as if the blaze would be confined to that wing flames burst out at the tower at the center of the main structure. Only the east wing and the stone walls are left. Nearly all the baggage was saved, but important papers and records were lost. The building was owned by the Union Depot company, four-fifths of the stock in which is owned by the Union Pacific Railroad company and one-fifth by the Denver & Rio Grande. The loss is estimated at $225,000; insured for $125,000.

Surprise for a Cowboy.

Great Falls, Mont., March 20.—Thomas Wegner, a cowboy from El Paso, Tex., rode up to the pawnbroker's shop of Sam Herskopitz, dismounted and, with leveled revolver, called upon Herskopitz for cash. The latter produced all he had about his person and was unlocking the drawer in the safe for more when a passer-by noticed the proceedings and, calling a policeman, interrupted the deal. Wegner told the officer that if he had not got the drop on him he would have been done up. The prisoner was armed with two revolvers and had a horse convenient for flight. Wegner is said to be a morphine fiend.

Both Men Defeated.

El Paso, Tex., March 19.—One of the hardest fights that ever took place in the West was fought yesterday between Australian Billy Smith and Billy Lewis of Butte, Mont. The fight was for $500. Smith weighed in at 152 and Lewis at 145. Lewis was knocked out in fourteen rounds.

She Hit the Wood Hard.

Pipestone, Minn., March 19.—Mrs. H. O. Anderson of Altoona, while splitting wood in the attic, jarred a hanging lamp down and the $1,200 house burned up and $400 with it. Insurance, $300.

TROUBLE IN DENVER

COLORADO'S CAPITAL VIRTUALLY UNDER MARTIAL LAW.

Militia Called Out to Enforce an Order of Gov. Waite—Nearly a Conflict With the Police and Deputy Sheriffs.

Denver, March 19.—The National Guard of Colorado is under arms, the federal troops from Fort Logan have been called out, and although martial law has not been officially proclaimed, there is no other recognized authority in Denver but the strong arm of the military.

This critical situation has been brought about by the determination of Gov. Waite to oust the two members of the fire and police board—Jackson Orr and D. J. Martin—whom he removed from office for protecting gambling houses, and placed in office as their successors S. D. Barnes and Dennis Mullins. Messrs. Orr and Martin having obtained from the district court an injunction restraining Gov. Waite from forcibly removing them, were determined to resist to the utmost. They accordingly kept the entire police force at the city hall all day under orders to resist the soldiers if attacked. In addition, several hundred of the toughest citizens, many of whom have records as man killers, were sworn in as deputies by Sheriff Burchill and placed in the city hall as a reinforcement of the police department. Each deputy was armed with two six-shooters and instructed to use them in case of necessity. The police were armed with shotguns in addition to their clubs and revolvers.

The First regiment and the Chaffee Light artillery arrived at the city hall, and Gen. Brooks, commanding officer, delivered to Police Lieut. Clay, in command outside of the city hall, a message to the effect that if the removed police commissioners did not vacate within half an hour the offices would be taken by force. Orr and Martin refused to surrender. Before the half hour expired prominent citizens entered into negotiations with both parties to the controversy with a view to reaching a settlement by arbitration, and while the negotiations were in progress a truce was declared. The streets about the city hall were packed with an angry mob, numbering many thousands.

On the governor's representation that the state militia would probably be inadequate to cope with the mob that had full possession of the city, Gen. McCook called out the United States infantry from Fort Logan, thirteen miles from here, to act in conjunction with the state and local authorities in clearing the streets and preserving the peace.

Adjt. Gen. Tarsney, an old Indian fighter, placed the militia strategically in front of the city hall in Fourteenth street, with two Gatlings covering the two big Napoleons, loaded with grape and solid shot, trained on the city hall, and four companies of militia in front and around them to stand the crowd off.

The excitement is intense and increased by the reinforcement of the local state troops, numbering 229 men, by the Boulder and Fort Collins companies, of the First regiment, and the Second regiment companies from Colorado Springs and Pueblo.

The state troops suddenly left the scene of expected hostilities at the city hall and went back to the armory. The regular troops from Fort Logan are stationed in front of the union depot, awaiting orders from Gen. McCook. The understanding is that hostilities have been suspended for the present.

Where Is the Cash.

Chamberlain, S. D., March 16.—Aurora county has developed a case which is a striking parallel to the mysterious disappearance of the money at the Watertown land office some weeks ago. Whether the money in this case will be found in the same peculiar manner as that at Watertown remains to be seen. Particulars received here to-day state that a former named Babcock has until a recent election been treasurer of Center township. On the evening before he intended turning the township money over to his successor he claims that two men came to his house, called him out doors, and, presenting a revolver, made him give up the money, amounting to $350. He could not identify the robbers, and the only evidence procured was that horse tracks near the house compared with those of a team owned by a neighbor named Flaheart. Babcock had Flaheart and another man named McGill arrested as the guilty parties. They have had an examination, but were acquitted. It was testified that both men were at home seven miles distant at the time of the robbery. The alleged theft has many peculiar features. Babcock did not give the alarm until fifteen hours later. An investigation will probably follow.

Shot His Troublesome Tenants.

Shreveport, La., March 16.—Two desperate negroes were killed at the Henry Mooring place by G. S. Noel. They had quarreled over paying their rent, and when called upon drew an axe and a club on Noel, threatening to kill him. He killed Will Lane and mortally wounded his brother.

Northwestern Postmasters.

Washington, March 16.—The following postmasters were appointed to-day in Minnesota: Dora, Otter Tail county, R. W. Cullison, vice Ernest Schurmann, resigned; Sanborn, Redwood county, E. W. Rebstock, vice W. A. Hackley, removed. Stephen Rush was appointed at Rockerville, Pennington county, S. D., vice J. L. Carlin, resigned.

Strikers Will Resume Work.

Springfield, Ohio, March 16.—One of the largest coal operators of the Jackson district stated to-day that the 4,000 striking miners will return to work on Monday under the old contract.

Death at a Wedding.

Winnebago City, Minn., March 16.—C. M. Houston, living about six miles west of this place, dropped dead of heart disease last night at the close of his daughter's wedding. Mr. Houston had resided in this vicinity for several years, and was esteemed by all who knew him.

Child Scalded.

Rushford, Minn., March 16.—The two-year-old child of I. C. Johnson was terribly scalded. There is little hope of recovery.

BREVITIES

Oranges and lemons at Arthurs.

John Stranahan went over to [illegible] last Friday for a short visit.

F. B. Malberg, of Excel was doing business in town last Friday.

M. E. Bjork is having his bar painted and fixed up in an artistic manner.

P. J. Russell, of Crookston, was in town several hours last Monday.

Next Sunday is easter and the fruit of the hen will be in big demand.

We had several inches of snow fall last Thursday but in a couple of days it all melted away.

Ducks and geese are here which would indicate that spring is not very far away.

Look over the financial statement which we publish this week, and see what becomes of the village cash.

Last Saturday was St. Patrick's day but our local irishmen must have been asleep as they did not celebrate.

Andrew Soderberg had the misfortune to cut the big toe of his right foot off while trimming poles last week.

A. C. Schmidt has been papering and painting in the M. E. Church the past week and he has done an artistic job.

They do say that Charley Rapo can give an excellant imitation of an Indian war dance, but it is hard work to get him to do it.

County Commissioner Demers was in town last Monday on his way to Crookston to attend a meeting of the county board.

Estimator Beaulieu, of the Red Lake estimating corps was in town a couple of hours last Monday. He was on his way to his home at White Earth agency

The Ladies Aid of the M. E. Church will give an easter supper on Friday Mch, 23. There will be an abundance of hot sugar and other refreshments All are invited.

It is rumored that Conductor Murry has gone into training for the base ball season. The other day he was seen to catch a young lady on the fly as she jumped from a moving train.

The shelving and counters in Rapp & Post's new store are nearly finished and they will move in a few days. They will have one of the finest equipped stores in Polk county.

We learn that Constables Brink and Dainard are practicing on a new sentimental song which they will soon spring on the public, entitled "We are the law makers." The scene in which they both sit on a table with their arms around each other is very touching.

Some one has started a report that the Great Northern would give us a daily train as soon as spring opens. Persons who take stock in the story must be foolish indeed. We should all get down on our knees and thank—Jim Hill, that we get three trains a week.

Our early spring has developed into a good sized winter to-day. Yesterday it commenced raining and continued for several hours finally developing into a snow storm. It is still snowing with several inches of the beautiful on the ground and the chances for a cold snap are excellant.

We understand that there will soon be a change in the running time of this branch. As it is now a passenger can make connection at Crookston with the Northern Pacific. This is clearly at variance with the policy of the Great Northern, and they will run their train into Crookston after the N. P. leaves.

Prince Frank Gravel was in town last Friday. The Prince earned his title by always carrying his counters with him like the Prince of Wales. This, however was before Mrs. G. made a raid on his grip. Now he uses coffee beans or sulpher matches, and he is in a fair way of losing his title as the boys are beginning to find his curves.

Who would not be a station agent, when a young lady comes along with a basket of live poultry and insists that it be checked free as baggage, becomes indignant when told it was against the rules to check live stock, that the R. R. Co. furnished stock cars for the carrying of stock have such a look of scorn flashed at you from a handsome pair of eyes, that would make you weep seventeen rain barrels full of scalding tears, and then see the young lady and basket of poultry disappear in the first-class coach. Verily his grief is genuine and great.

The SPECTATOR is able to announce to its readers with authority that the rumor that Elmer Stranahan was in the habit of taking his new McIntosh coat to bed with him, is false. A reporter interviewed Mr. Stranahan on the subject and he pronounced the rumor a base fabrication. Said he "The person who started that story must have 'wheels in his head' or he would know that the coat is carefully folded and locked in Holmes' fire proof safe every night."

The business men of Red Lake Falls have inaugurated a boycott against the Northern Pacific railroad company on account of their change of train service from a daily to a tri-weekly service and are now giving their business to the Great Northern Ry. Co. It is now claimed the N. P. will go back to their daily service in the near future.—Fertile Journal.

England as well as this country is just now rapidly finding out that the single gold standard is paralyzing business on account of the yellow metal. Speed the day when the change is made from the debt producing, business destroying and pauper-making gold basis. Gold might do for a money of final redemption were it more plenty, but with its present scarcity it is destruction to those in debt and no good to any one except the bond and mortgage holder.—Litchfield Paper.

A call at the county treasurers office elicited the information that the personal property taxes already paid made a better showing than at the same period last year. One strange thing about the taxes this year is the number of persons who have taken advantage of the mails to do business with the county treasurer. During the last four days of February there were 2,500 persons paid their personal taxes by mail. The time was when people thought they were compelled to visit the court house in person in order to liquidate their taxes.—Crookston Times.

A committee of Great Northern employes appeared before the chamber of commerce yesterday, asking aid in securing living wages from the railroad. It appears by comparison of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific wage schedule that the former is nearly 50 per cent lower. W. C. P. Adams, local secretary of the American railway union, said wages had been reduced till now some men were getting $1 a day, and if the train was ten or twelve hours late they was docked their wages He referred sarcastically to President Hill as the great philantrophist of the Northwest, saying: "God says man shall work six days and rest the seventh but Jim Hill comes between man and God and says man shall work seven days and receive $1 a day."—Globe.

The following from an exchange is to the point. "Next to a man's family and business, nothing should stand nearer his heart the town in which he lives. It is the palace where he wins his competency and educates his children. He wants to make it as popular as thrifty and widely known as possible he cannot afford to be indifferent to anything which furthers these ends. It can be said the town not worthy the devotion of its citizens in making it widely known and greatly prosperous is a town in which it is not worth while to live at all If such a town is worth anything, it is worth the full measure of our donation, whether we receive an immediate dividend of dollars and cents or whether we merely take our share of the common benefits accorded to the community.

DOES IT WORK QUICKLY.

The Terrible Celerity With Which the Guillotine Takes Human Life.

The striking thing about the execution of Vaillant was the appalling quickness of it all. Action was so rapid, says a writer in the New York World, from the instant he appeared in the doorway of the prison to the moment the knife fell that it was almost impossible to distinguish the slight chain of incidents. He flung himself eagerly against the plank, was strapped to it and in the flash of a glance the plank was pushed forward on the platform of the guillotine. An instant's vision of a recumbent figure, face downward; in the same moment a head, with two staring, wide open eyes, whirled almost defiantly, as it seemed, and with a slight zigzag movement, to the rightward, while simultaneously the pinioned body rolled inert, convulsive, into the capacious basket, also at the right-hand side of the guillotine. The swiftness, the mechanical promptness of the business fairly stupefied the spectator. It was impossible to realize that a human life had ended in less time than it would take to draw a full breath. The guillotine had done its work well. There was scarcely a sense of horror in the sight. Twenty-four hours later no one could have associated Paris with perhaps the most impressive vengeance society has ever taken upon the revolt. The Mardi Gras festival was being kept as no Mardi Gras known since the bonanza days of the empire. In spite of the "London weather," as it is called, all the gayeties and graces known to French fun-making were ostentatiously visible in every quarter. Pageants of revellers filled the streets in theatrical garb. The concert halls contributed a cavalcade immensely successful in merry-making. Scores upon scores of high chariots, bedecked with every fantastic device known to stage management and crowned with the bedizened houris of the scene, kept the population in open-mouth delight from early morning to midnight.

THE DENTISTRY OF TO-DAY.

Changes Since Washington had Teeth Carved from a Block of Ivory.

When we think reverently and admiringly of the father of our country, and of all the dangers he dared and the evils he encountered we are not apt to remember one of the hardest trials of his life; and that must have been the accomodation of his mouth to a set of teeth manufactured 3,000 miles away from that mouth, and carved, it is said, from a whole block of ivory. When he had contrived to accomodate himself to the momentous affair it must have been a singular revelation that his smile made, and Lady Washington may have found something trying in the face opposite her of the greatest and grandest of men. What a marvel in comparison is the dentistry of to-day, that knows how to preserve the teeth indefinitely while that is best, and so to preserve the shape of the face and the original beauty of the lips, and upon necessity can absolutely remove the bone, and put in its place the prepared rubber, to which the plate shall be riveted and clamped, till a fair face is made out of a ruin. And what a difference in the teeth made to-day to supply deficiencies, so light, so useful, fitting so smoothly in the plate, that one almost longs to see nature replaced and improved upon universally.

Yet in spite of the beautiful delicacy and regularity of the modern artifical tooth in general, a much better effect is obtained when the teeth are not so perfect, and each so exactly like its typical prototype. A little gold filling here, a very slight shortening there, a tiny gap, a hint of overlapping, an atom or two of unevenness at the end, all help more in the vraisemblance than matched and precise perfectness does. This, however, is more useful than for the vraisemblance in giving individuality to the mouth. All and each of these little peculiarities seem to express some idiosyncrasy of the person possessing them; they are like arresting and retaining points to the memory or the imagination. And provided they be not to obtrusive, and the teeth are sufficiently wholesome looking otherwise, they do not at all interfere with the charm of "sugared lips parted with sugar breath." It is with difficulty, indeed, that any healthy teeth unless they are set in ugly and projecting gums, can do aught but add to the luster and life of the countenance. A man whose beard largely hides his teeth can even meet this difficulty, and is never at the disadvantage, so far as teeth are spoken of, that a woman is when these teeth are not all they should be. But great as the marvels of dentistry are, and life-like and comfortable as artificial teeth can now be made, unless one is willing to undergo operations that shall make some foreign substance act the part the roots of the teeth in filling out and holding up the cheek, and so, maintaining the agreeable look of youth, one had best do all that is possible to preserve the original teeth, and forego any great personal knowledge of the dentist's powers.

She Understood Brazilian Warfare.

He was sad and sorrowful when he came to her, for he was going far away to be a soldier of fortune and he had never yet told her that they must separate for months, perhaps for years. She met him cheerfully, but when she saw the shadows on his face a chill came to her heart.

"What is it, Henry?" she asked trembling.

"Dear one," he sighed, "I am going away."

"Where, darling?" she cried, throwing herself into his arms.

"I am going to the battle's front; to mingle with brave men who are struggling in a common cause for I am needed there."

"O, Henry," she sobbed, "you must not go. You will be slain and my heart will be broken. I cannot let you go to be slaughtered, darling; I cannot, I cannot!"

"But, darling," he said, trying to soothe her, "I must go. The Brazilian cause——"

"Are you going to Brazil?" she interrupted.

"Yes, darling," he answered bravely.

"O, won't that be lovely?" she exclaimed merrily. "Let me go with you." And the heroism of Henry went down in a frightful slump.—Detroit Free Press.

The March number of the American Journal of Politics contains a non-partisan article by Gen. C. C. Andrews of St. Paul on "The Demoralizing Influence of the Spoils System." The writer concedes that progress has been made in civil service reform as the clerks, below chiefs of divisions, in the departments at Washington, are appointed with reference to fitness rather than for party adherence. Also, Massachusetts and New York have established their civil service on a non-partisan basis. Still, he estimates that including national, state and municipal offices, there are about 200,000 appointments in this country that are regarded as spoils, and controlled by political leaders. No matter, the writer claims, how meritorious a record an officer may have made, he is liable to be removed to give place for a friend of an influential politician. Offices are thus practically confiscated. The injustice of the system weakens respect for government and leads to lawlessness. The remedy would be to place the civil service on a non-partisan basis.

Noisy Absorption of Poison.

Richmond, Ind., Special to the Chicago Inter-Ocean:—Indiana now has another madstone, the property of A. M. Thompson, of Marion County. It was brought from Glasgow, Scotland, in 1814, by an eccentric Scotch woman named Chloe Stout, and Mr. Thompson purchased it of her heirs at Lincoln, Nebraska. The stone measures three and a half inches in length and two and a half inches in width, and is shaped like a half pear, while the surface is filled with minute pores. Before applying to a wound it is held to the fire and its temperature raised to blood heat. It is then moistened with warm water and applied. It is said that if the ear be placed on the bare stone while it is at work one can easily hear it absorbing the poison from the wound. It remains at work generally an hour, but often two hours; the poison is afterward extracted from the stone by heated milk.

A TALE OF A PLOT.

One morning many years ago two boatmen stood on Deal Beach, gazing at a crowd of ships lying immediately abreast. One said to the other:

"Bill, see that there schooner lying in the wake of the little brig?"

"Yes," answered Bill.

"I was aboard her last noight. I couldn't see no crew to speak of. Three men and a boy. Them's all I noticed, and she's all two hundred ton."

"She'll be waiting for men, you lay," said Bill.

The other boatman shrugged his shoulders. For some time they talked about other ships which floated in the crowd. The boatman named Bill then asked his mate if he knew where that little brig yonder was bound to.

"Pernambuca."

"What's her cargo, d'ye know?"

"Why, old Hammond was a-talking about her yesterday, and I reckon she's a rich ship. I'd like to have the salving of her. Old Hammond talked of pictures, planofortes, and a sort of toy-shop consignment."

"She's middling deep with it."

After conversing for some time in this way, the two men repaired to a public house.

The Downs submitted a full scene of shipping that morning, but the slight wind was foul for a down-channel run. Afar would glide some shining breasts of sail, slowly blowing Thamesward, or to the German Ocean, and at long intervals the light blue sky was tarnished by the smoke of a steamer. It was mostly canvas in those days, though the side-wheel had for some time been plying between France and England, and tall ships of an uncouth pattern were being paddled by like means around the Cape into Indian seas.

The breeze hung southwest all day long, but toward eleven o'clock at night it veered into northeast. The moon was then riding high, and the light under her, flashing from the southern limb of the Goodwins to the very shadow of the South Foreland, was a fan-shaped glow of trembling greenish silver.

By this light, to the first shift of the wind, above a hundred ships of all classes and denominations started to get under way, and the damp inshore night wind was merry with the music of capstan and windlass, and the songs of men heaving at handles and thrusting at bars.

The world has few finer sights to offer than a great fleet of ships of all rigs unmooring by moonlight, lifting their swelling heights of canvas to the stars, and moving, pale and silent, like a vast cloud over the face of the waters, every spire of sail waning in the moonshine till you might think it was a column of steam feathering out of the shivering splendor under the planet.

One of the first of the vessels to get up her anchor was the little brig the boatman had questioned his companion about. Scarcely was she under way when the schooner astern of her slowly mastheaded her mainsail as though with the help of machinery, and setting a jib, followed the brig, steering for the other's counter as if she sought the pilotage of a red lantern that hung there.

As the channel opened the vessels scattered. It might have been noticed, however, though there was nothing whatever significant in the circumstance, that the schooner, under easy canvas, continued to sail in the wake of the brig.

The wind freshened in the small hours. At dawn the brig was washing through it nobly under a maintopgallantsail. The land of England stretched along to starboard. Astern and on the port beam were several sail, and one of them was the schooner, leaning sharply over, the foam bursting in clouds from her shearing stern as she raced through the ridges.

A man on the deck of the brig, after looking at the schooner through a telescope, closed the tubes with a nod of satisfaction, and turning to a burly fellow who stood beside him, exclaimed: "It's all right Silas! Dick's got the scent. But we'll need to keep a bright lookout."

The person who spoke these words was the captain of the brig, a man named George Butcher, and the seaman whom he addressed was his brother Silas, the mate of the vessel. They were as unlike as it is possible to imagine. George was a slender, wiry, dark man, sharp and restless of glance; his brother was a great lump of a figure almost shapeless, puffed about the cheeks, scarlet with weather and drink, with large protruding moist blue yes.

It was true, as the Deal boatman had told the other, that this brig, whose name was the Mermaid, was bound to Pernambuco, and the Deal boatman had doubtless good reason for alleging that her cargo was a valuable one.

Now, all through this day the brig stormed along, but when the night came, though the breeze had scanted somewhat, sail was reduced, and the mate, Silas Butcher, soon after sunset hung a large, brilliantly burning red lamp over the vessel's stern. There were four seamen, a cook and a boy, making with the boatswain, the captain and the mate, nine souls in all.

The name of the boatswain was Jonathan Cheap. At midnight he relieved the deck, acting as second mate. Time after time he might have been seen to step aft and look over the stern to see that the lantern was burning; and time after time he would carefully sweep the sea line astern and on either quarter with a night glass, doing in this precisely what Silas Butcher, who had gone below at eight bells, had done before him ever since it fell dusk.

It was on the afternoon of the sixth day following the date of the brig's departure from the Downs. The weather was fine, the breeze moderate, and the brig was rolling before it with a crow-like flap of her dark and ill-set canvas, occasionally as she sank her round bows into the white brine.

Jonathan Cheap was aloft on the foretopgallantyard, apparently at work there, though had his motions been attentively surveyed from the deck, it would have been seen that he repeatedly, in a furtive way, directed a small pocket telescope at the line of the horizon on the starboard cathead. The mate and the captain paced the deck together, and both of them would often pause to gaze intently in the direction in which the boatswain peered.

An able seaman, named Samuel Carter, stood at the little wheel. The boy was in the galley, and two sailors were below, their watch being up.

On a sudden the boatswain from aloft sung out, "Sail ho!" and then, having apparently finished what he was about, at once descended to the deck and went aft to the two Butchers, with whom he exchanged a few sentences.

Half an hour later the gleaming cloths of a vessel were plain in sight on the starboard bow; she came along fast, [illegible] the Mermaid's [illegible] was good, George Butcher and his brother were soon able to [illegible] her course as though to intercept the brig was a fore-and-aft schooner.

They waited a little; then George Butcher, bringing his eye away from the telescope, said in a low voice to his brother:

When the schooner was almost in a line with the brig, she hove to, "scandalizing" her mainsail, as it is called, and letting go her halyards, and there she lay without headway, delicately swaying her somewhat elegant shape upon the long blue heave of sea, whilst from the maintopmast head there floated the red commercial flag of Great Britain, the Jack inverted as a signal for distress.

"Better heave to and see what he wants," cried George Butcher, in a loud voice; whereupon Silas sang out for the main-braces to be manned, and the seamen of the brig brought her to a stand when she was within comfortable hailing distance of the schooner. Only two men were visible on the deck of the fore-and-after. One stood upon the rail and sent a melancholy howl across of: "Brig ahoy!"

"Hallo?" shouted Capt. George Butcher, in response.

"We're in great distress," cried the man, in a melancholy, dirge-like key. "We're terrible short of hands. Can yer loan us a seaman or two to help us to our port?"

Capt. Butcher turned to the mate and the Boatswain Cheap, and appeared to consult with them. Whilst this was doing the two men whose watch was below came up out of the forecastle to learn what the matter was. Presently Capt. Butcher shouted:

"Schooner ahoy! What schooner are you?"

The man answered that she was the Eagle, of one hundred and fifty tons, bound to Cadiz; and he was about to proceed when he was taken with a violent fit of coughing. Thereupon the other man came to his side and called an entreaty that a boat should be sent that their story might be related.

"For we're both too sick to make ourselves understood by shouting," said he.

Capt. Butcher flourished his hand affirmatively. A boat was lowered, and he and the Boatswain Cheap, the able seaman Samuel Carter, and another went aboard the schooner.

The mate, Silas Butcher, walked the deck of the brig, and the cook and remaining sailors leaned over the side, watching the schooner. All saving Carter got out of the boat and went on board the Eagle, and Silas Butcher saw them disappear down the little companionway.

In a few minutes the man who had first hailed the Mermaid came to the schooner's rail and shouted with lungs whose power of delivery gave the lie to the statement his companion had made.

"You can fill on your topsail. We've got the men, and we mean to keep 'em!"

The mate started, and looked thunderstruck, and bawled back, "What d'yer mean? You can't leave us in this quandary. I'm mate, but I know nothing of navigation, and how can I work the brig with those men?" and he pointed to the fellows who were staring over the rail.

"We can't help that!" shouted the other; "we want a navigator ourselves, and hands to sail the ship, and the men we've got are the men we mean to keep."

"Then if that's the case," bellowed the burly figure of the mate, with many marks of distress and consternation in the motions of his arms and shapeless bulk of body, "take me, too, for I'm not a-going to be left here to drown."

The other signed with his hand, and calling to a man who was pacing the deck forward entered the boat in which Carter was seated. They promptly rowed aboard the Mermaid. Meanwhile nothing was to be seen of Capt. George Butcher and his companions.

The man who climbed over the brig's side was a square, stoutly-built fellow in a glazed hat and a round coat. The moment he showed himself Silas Butcher began to abuse him in all the injurious words he could find tongue for. The other listened coolly and then said:

"Is to be stay or go with you?"

"Why," cried the mate, "I can't navigate this ship, but I call those men to witness that you're thieves and scoundrels, and that under the mask of wanting help you've stolen a ship's crew!"

"Get into the boat," said the man with a scowl.

The mate was stepping to the side when the cook called out:

"Are we to be left?"

"There's no help for it. We're too few for them," growled Silas Butcher, doubling his fists.

"What's to become of us, then?" said the cook.

"You can come along with the rest," said the man who hailed from the schooner. "We can do with more—with all of ye. But bet your life that the men this here mate says we've stolen are the men we want and mean to keep."

A sharp discussion followed. It ended in the remaining sailors and boy bringing up their bags and getting into the boat, and swearing it was all one to them, that what must be, must be, and that they were not going to be left in the brig to wash about, perhaps for weeks, and then be found, maniacs or corpses.

The mate, before stepping into the boat, asked permission to descend into the cabin to collect a few of his things. He was some time absent. The man in the glazed hat exhibited no impatience. Presently he appeared, the boat shoved off, and the brig was left derelict.

The breeze all this while was falling; when the people were on board the schooner sail was made and her head was put off southwest. Nevertheless it was contrived that the brig should be kept in sight until on a sudden she was seen to melt out against the western gleam. The man in the glazed hat was watching her through a telescope when she disappeared.

He said to Jonathan Cheap, who stood close beside him, "She's gone!" and immediately orders were given to crowd the schooner with canvas.

It was not until eighteen months after this that the mystery of the schooner's procedure and of the brig's abandonment was cleared up. Samuel Carter turned queen's evidence, and thus an extraordinary fraud was brought to light.

It seems that the Mermaid, with a worthless cargo, professedly consigned to Pernambuco, was insured in the Ocean, Neptune, Oceanic and other insurance offices for upwards of thirteen thousand pounds. The vessel was registered in the name of the Butchers. They told their story—how the captain and crew had been stolen out of the brig [illegible] witnesses from the Eagle, men who afterwards swore that they had been kidnapped into complicity by deadly threats, testified to the truth of the Butchers' statement.

The insurance people, not being in those days so very critical in inquiry as they now are, paid the money. A squabble over the division of the plunder ensued, and Carter turned upon his confederates. He said that the Eagle had been hired by the Butchers to follow the brig out of the Downs, and under the pretence of wanting men, to kidnap her commander and crew. The mate, Butcher, when he entered the brig's cabin, avowedly to fetch his clothes, scuttled her, and they waited to see her sink before they "cracked on."

The schooner went to pieces on a Bahama key, but all hands came off with their lives.

The Butchers were arrested. Cheap effected his escape, nor were the rogues who had taken part in the proceedings aboard the Eagle to be found. Abundant evidence was forthcoming, and George and Silas Butcher were sentenced to transportation for the term of their natural lives.—W. Clark Russell, in Youth's Companion.

PUMPKIN PIE.

A Vandal Argues That It Never Existed—But He Has Eaten Ginger Pie.

We find the pumpkin to be, apparently, the largest of fruits; but on cutting into it it is discovered to be hollow, the spacious interior being simply festooned with a clammy variety of vegetable cobweb, in which the seeds are suspended. Why the pumpkin should not grow like the orange is not apparent, unless it is simply to gain credit for size of which it is not deserving. Such gain of applause under false pretenses can not be too severely condemned. The pumpkin must be set down as a hollow and hypocritical vegetable, and association with it cannot but have a bad effect on character.

But we are not trying the pumpkin as a fruit, and further consideration of it in a raw state may be omitted. But we wish to raise the questions: "Does not some insincerity follow the pumpkin into the pie? What part does pumpkin play in the so-called pie? Is pumpkin food, especially for breakfast?" In the first place, let us note that the best chemical analyses of pumpkin pie show it to be composed of ginger and stewed pumpkin, with no traces of other minor substances. Next we are to observe that hardy investigators who have examined it say that stewed pumpkin in its native or pure state has but little taste, and that little is a bad taste. We now come to the fact that what we taste in pumpkin pie is ginger. By what easy and unassailable steps we arrive in the clear radiance of the truth that in the pumpkin pie the pumpkin is a mere medium for holding the ginger in solution but that nevertheless it has fastened its name upon the pie. It is as if lemonade should call itself water. What the country has been eating all these years, at breakfast and otherwise, is ginger pie.

We cannot hope that our crushing exposure of the ingenuousness of the pumpkin from the hour of its birth upward will have any effect on the name of the pie in which it acts as the vehicle for holding the invigorating and honest ginger in suspension. So long as pumpkin is used as the base for a certain pie, that pie will continue to be called pumpkin pie. But is it not possible that another and better base can be found for the so-called pumpkin pie? Pumpkin being tasteless and unnutritious, there is no reason why it should be eaten even at breakfast. We scarcely know what to suggest to take the place of pumpkin, but wood pulp occurs to us. Wood pulp has been used for so many things during the past few years that it seems not unreasonable that it be extended to pie. It ought to be much cheaper than pumpkin, and would not have its disagreeable taste. It would also have the merit of being nutritious. With wood pulp as a background, as it were, ginger would be liberally projected upon it, and a pie produced which our friend, the New Englander, could with impunity sit up in bed and eat before breakfast. But a right start must be made with this pie; honor to whom honor is due; it must be called gingere pie.—Harper's Weekly.

THIRD-STORY CHICKEN-FARM.

A Full-Fledged Ranch Carried on in a Montana City Block.

People passing the Realty block within the past few days, says the Anaconda Standard, have been attracted by a novel sight in the window of one of the vacant storerooms. In a shallow wooden box, less than three feet square, their downy bodies in constant motion and their shrill pipings sounding even through the glass, are seventy-two chickens, apparently as happy as if they were in a barnyard under the care of a bustling hen. The box is a "brooder" and is the only mother that the seventy-two fluffy youngsters have ever known, and in it they have lived for the week that they have been alive. Prompted by curiosity, a reporter sought out Mrs. Childs, the landlady of the building, to learn if possible whether or not she intends to start a poultry ranch in a three-story brick block in the city, and if she is, to learn how she proposes to run it. Mrs. Childs demonstrated very easily that she knows what she is doing, and that she can do it successfully. She has started to raise broilers for the market and intends to do it in her block. Mrs. Childs' apartments are on the third story and in one of her rooms she has two incubators, one containing 100 eggs and the other 200. Here the chickens are hatched, and as soon as they get the use of their legs they are transferred to the brooder and taken to the basement, which has been divided into pens of convenient size. Here they live, in the brooder until they are two weeks old, when they are placed in the pens and are allowed to run about and grow. And how they do grow in the warm room and what a noise they make with their incessant piping. When they are eight or nine weeks old they are ready for market.

Not Born to Die That Way.

Michael O'Reilly's lucky star must have shone over him, for he had about as narrow an escape from instant death recently at the Barus mine as was ever recorded. He was ascending the ladder-way in the pumping shaft above the 400 level, when one of the ladder rounds broke, and he lost his balance and fell into the shaft. He dropped about fifty feet and in some manner managed to grasp hold of a water pipe or something of the kind, and clung to it. Otherwise he would have fallen 200 feet to the 600 level and into the pool of water. He managed to swing to the ladder again. Another miner started below for a light [illegible]. He was raised to the surface, and Doctors Wells and McGrinnan were summoned. They found that, aside from a [illegible] and some painful bruises, the man had been great[illegible]. He was carried to his home in Dublin Gulch. Mr. O'Reilly has a wife and one child.—Butte, Mont., Inter-Mountain.

An Arizona Necklace.

A young lady of this city, whose brother a mining engineer, is now in Tucson, Arizona, recently received from him a handsome present—a necklace of artificial flowers, so rare in form and color that their likeness does not probably exist, at least outside that territory. Accompanying this gift was a description of its component parts, which were put together by a civilized Navajo Indian, through the chemical preparation of the materials, which are chiefly rattlesnake fangs, the legs of centipedes, and the scales of the Gila monster; was the work of the engineer. Subjected to a solution of sulphuric acid, the fangs became an ivory white and were used as stamens, the legs turned to a translucent yellow and were circled into petals while the green fish scales formed sepals and buds. Into the hollow fangs and legs were injected scarlet and blue mineral oxides—the tints showing through. The flowers are connected by little links of virgin gold.—Philadelphia Record.

Facts Worth Knowing.

In all diseases of the nasal mucous membrane the remedy used must be non-irritating. Nothing satisfactory can be accomplished with douches, snuffs or powders because they are all irritating, do not reach the affected surfaces and should be abandoned as failures. A multitude of persons, who had for years borne all the worry and pain that catarrh can inflict testify to radical and permanent cures wrought by Ely's Cream Balm.

THE POLLARD CASE.

THE SENSATIONAL SUIT AGAINST BRECKINRIDGE.

Miss Pollard Takes the Stand and Relates the Story of Her Shame—She Testifies That Breckinridge Held Illicit Relations With Her After His Marriage.

Washington, Special.—The suit for breach of promise instituted by Miss Madeline Pollard against Congressman Breckinridge of Kentucky, which has been on trial for the past week, promises to be the most sensational in court annals since the famous Beecher-Tilton case. The time so far has been taken up with the selection of the jury, reading of depositions, and taking of evidence in support of Miss Pollard's claim that Mr. Breckinridge had promised to marry her. Friday Miss Pollard took the stand and commenced her story of how Breckinridge played on her affections and completely gained control of her as to accomplish her ruin under promise of marriage. She also testified that Breckinridge was the father of four children born to her.

Washington, March 20.—Madeline Pollard faced her opponents on the witness stand to-day under a continuous fire of cross-questions, and the trial was like a play in which one actor is starred to the exclusion and belittlement of all accessories. Maj. Ben Butterworth, the ex-congressman from Ohio, played a minor part as the questioner, all the interest centering about the slender black-robed plaintiff in the case.

It was the most interesting day of the sensational trial, and it was made more so by the masterful display of the intellectual resources of Miss Pollard, and the telling replies which flashed forth at every turn of the plot as the lawyers followed up every possible trail which might lead to admissions casting any sort of shadow on the life of the woman apart from those passages which had been identified with the career of the Kentucky congressman.

Miss Pollard told of the illicit relations, which had existed between her and Col. Breckinridge for many years. She said they continued until May 17, 1893. This produced a sensation, as Col. Breckinridge secretly married Mrs. Wing, his present wife, April 29, or nearly a month before his last visit to Miss Pollard. When Miss Pollard was asked how long she and the colonel remained at a certain assignation house in Washington she replied: "Two or three hours, wasn't it, Mr. Breckinridge?" at the same time looking directly at the defendant. This caused a general laugh which the judge rebuked. The witness said that Col. Breckinridge compelled her to give one of the children away. At one time during the examination Miss Pollard wept and was on the verge of fainting. Once during the testimony she declared that justice would be done, and "these men (looking at the jury) will see that it is done."

Washington, March 21.—The cross-examination of Miss Pollard was resumed to-day. A letter was handed to the plaintiff, which she said had been written by her to her protector, Mr. Rhodes. After looking at it she inquired why the heading had been torn off, Mr. Butterworth replying that he did not know, and her lawyers cautioning her that it was not her place to ask questions. Mr. Butterworth read the letter to the jury. It was dated Lexington, Nov. 20, 1884.

"Miss Hoyt has just asked me for the money for my board," it said. "Please, dear, get me that $40 before Saturday, without fail. I know any one with as many friends as you can get it; you can come Saturday evening at 7 and stay until half-past 8. Be careful in talking and we can have a pleasant time. Put the money in an envelope and hand it to me at the door as you go. Yours truly, Madeline," was the signature. There was a reference in the letter to people who lived across the street whom she did not want to know or be made known to.

Another letter was presented to the plaintiff, scrutinized by her lawyers and read to the jury. It was dated Nov. 27 and began "Dear Mr. Rhodes;" and expressed worry at not receiving the money. Other letters of much the same character were read. One dated Feb. 9, 1885, spoke of her disappointment at not having received money, and told him not to come to see her unless he brought it. This was just before Miss Pollard was going away for the birth of her first child.

Among the letters were two dated at New Orleans and postmarked Toolesborough, Ky., in which the writer told Rhodes of her arrival in New Orleans; of the weather, and other inconsequential things. Other letters, some dated at Cincinnati and others at Lexington, asked Rhodes for money, the sum varying from $10 to $40. Mr. Butterworth devoted his questioning principally to the New Orleans letters, and the plaintiff frankly admitted that she had never been in that city.

"Mr. Breckinridge knows very well where I was at that time," she added.

"But I was not asking Mr. Breckinridge," Mr. Butterworth remonstrated. Her explanation when again asked was:

"Did your mother know where you were when you wrote those letters?"

"Mr. Breckinridge planned them all—dictated them to me. Some of them he wrote on the typewriter when I was ill in the asylum and not able to write, saying in explanation that I was learning the typewriter; some of them he wrote in advance and dated ahead. He would mail them on the cars or wherever they would not be postmarked."

She said that she received various sums from Mr. Rhodes.

During the examination counsel for Col. Breckinridge admitted the marriage in New York to Mrs. Wing, but objected to the word "secret."

Miss Pollard admitted that she threatened to shoot Col. Breckinridge in New York and he promised to marry her then. That was the day after he was married to Mrs. Wing. She said people had sent her anonymous letters, telling of his relations with negro women. When Miss Pollard spoke about her dead baby she broke down and wept audibly. As she could not compose herself court adjourned.

Washington, March 22.—The cross-examination of Miss Pollard was concluded to-day without bringing out any sensational testimony, and the plaintiff rested her case.

There was a rustling in the Breckinridge camp of conversation and documents, after which Attorney Butterworth asked for a few moments for his side for consultation, and the defendant, his son Desha and five attorneys trooped out through the door by which Miss Pollard had made her exit.

"The delegation from Kentucky retired for conference," remarked a gentleman who had attended political conventions.

The Breckinridge forces were in retirement for twenty minutes. Then Col. John T. Shelby, the Lexington, Ky., law partner of Col. Breckinridge, a short pale man, with light mustache, partly bald head and spectacles, faced the jury to outline the defense.

"While the case was technically one for breach of promise," he said, "it includes a wider scope. I am authorized by the defendant to say," he said, "and it will be corroborated by his solemn oath, that he did not seduce her, that it never was made known to him that she had any children by him until the filing of this suit last August, nor did he ever, under any circumstances, make any promise of marriage to her."

The defense did not intend, he said, to condone whatever was wrong in the relations of the two, and it was only by the truth the defendant wanted to be judged.

Outlining what would be the defense, he stated that Miss Pollard had accosted Col. Breckinridge on the train, before which time he had never seen her. She invited him to call at the seminary. Having nothing else to do he went to the college that day and saw her. He saw not an ignorant girl, unacquainted with the ways of the world, for if there was one fact that would be established, it was that the plaintiff was at least twenty or twenty-one years of age, and it would be shown by the doctor who officiated at the birth of her next youngest sister in 1865, when the plaintiff was then a little girl of two or three years of age, running about the house.

When the colonel arrived at the college she came into the college and saw him, explained the contract with Mr. Rhodes, which was that in consideration of his paying for the schooling, she was to marry him. She asked if he could compel her to marry him—a strange question for a school girl—and also said that she had submitted her person to Mr. Rhodes. He told her that she was not obliged to carry out the contract. She then asked him to take her to an entertainment on Vine street, and he consented.

That Col. Breckinridge had called a closed carriage that night was denied. It was declared that Miss Pollard had made the proposition that they ride instead of going to the concert, and the counsel said, that during the course of that ride and without the use of seductive means, but in that way which occurs when a woman is not averse to such things, an illicit relation was established on the first night he had been with her.

The defense will be partly denial and partly explanatory; denial that Col. Breckinridge seduced Madeline Pollard; that she gave birth to a child at the Norwood convent; an explanation that she trapped him into a promise to marry her, on the mutual understanding that the promise was only a devise by which she was to withdraw from his life and be able to break off her relations with Mrs. Blackburn. The long-continued illicit relations between the two are admitted without excuse or palliation except a reference to the inherent weakness of human nature, but the orator, spokesman, represents that he was often anxious to break them off, but was always inveigled into a continuance by the young woman; that she followed him, demanded money from him and compelled his promise to marry her under threats, several times repeated, and emphasized by a display of pistols. Moreover, it is promised to be shown that Miss Pollard's early life had not been one of virtue before the silver-tongued orator crossed her path. This, in substance, is the defense, but it has many branches and side issues.

Washington, March 23.—The reading of depositions was taken up late yesterday afternoon. Madeline Pollard was seated beside her lawyer, Judge Wilson, talking to him, with a smile playing across her face, and once as she talked she glanced over her shoulder at the white-haired defendant. Before Attorney Stoll had proceeded far with his elocutionary effort, Miss Pollard and her company rose and glided from the room, interrupting for a moment the reading. The first deposition was that of Sister Augustine, of the Norwood convent asylum, where Miss Pollard was at first confined. This sister had been for years at the convent, did not recognize Miss Pollard, who had been at the convent, and said there had never been but one Louise Wilson there, and she gave birth to a child there last fall. The entries on the convent books under the name of Miss Burgoyne corresponded with the dates which Miss Pollard and Dr. Street had given of her admittance to the asylum, the birth of the child and her departure. The name of the child on the record was M. Gertrude Burgoyne. According to the recollection of the sister Miss Burgoyne had visited the convent twice after the child was born. The child, Marie Gertrude Burgoyne, had died in July, 1886. When Miss Pollard was told of this, the sister deposed she had thrown up her hands and run from the room, but when she returned there was no evidence of grief in her face. Several other minor depositions were read and court adjourned until Monday.

Washington, March 26.—The Pollard-Breckinridge trial was resumed to-day, both the plaintiff and defendant being present. The reading of depositions was resumed. Saturday afternoon Judge Bradley executed a bit of strategy on the newspaper men who had gathered to hear the arguments over the admissibility of certain depositions taken for the defense. A whisper passed among the lawyers and they slipped one by one into the judge's consultation room adjoining the court room. A uniformed bailiff standing at the door denied admission to all but the legal forces, Col. Breckinridge and his son, Desha. There are three depositions to which Miss Pollard's attorneys make their principal objections, the point involved being the relevancy of testimony bearing upon Miss Pollard's character. One of the depositions was made by Alec Julian and referred to a mock marriage said to have been performed at Squire Tinsley's house. Another was the Roseele deposition, the latter claiming that Miss Pollard had asked him to take her to Chicago. The third was from Dr. Lewis of Lexington, who affirms that Col. Swope asked him to perform a criminal operation upon a woman whom he called Miss Pollard. He could not, however, identify the plaintiff.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, March 21.—The sundry civil appropriation bill was passed by the house without division. The amendments to the appropriation for the general land office, amending the provisions of the act of 1891 repealing the timber culture and pre-emption act, which was adopted in the committee at the suggestion of Mr. Holman, and which was bitterly opposed by the Western members, was defeated in the house. The clauses which sought to require an accounting by the disbursing officers of soldiers' homes to the treasury department, and annual reports by the boards to the secretary of war, fell under Mr. Black's point of order. The bill as passed carries $217,000 more than it did as reported from the committee on appropriations.

The tariff bill was to-day fairly launched on its way in the senate, Mr. Voorhees, the chairman of the finance committee, reporting it to the senate.

Washington, March 22.—The critical condition of Senator Colquitt of Georgia was the inspiration of the prayer of the senate chaplain this morning. The vice president being absent Mr. Harris, the president pro tem., occupied the chair this morning and the senate promptly settled down to routine business and a number of bills were taken from the calendar and passed. Among the bills passed was one granting right of way to the Jamestown & Northern Railway through the Devils Lake Indian reservation in North Dakota. At 2 o'clock the senate took up the unfinished business which was the bill to simplify the work of deeds of conveyance and trust and releases of land in the District of Columbia, and after further debating it for an hour without result, went into executive session, and at 3:30 adjourned until to-morrow.

Washington, March 23.—The house spent the entire day in filibustering over the O'Neil-Joy contested election case from the St. Louis district. The report of the committee is in favor of unseating Mr. Joy (Rep.), and the Republicans are determined that this shall not be accomplished unless the Democrats produce their own quorum. For five hours to-day they filibustered and kept the house dead-locked. The highest number of Democratic votes cast during the day was 166.

The bill for the purchase of a site for a new government printing office consumed nearly the whole morning hour, and much to the surprise of everybody an amendment providing for the purchase of what is known as the "Mahone site" was passed. Notice for a motion to reconsider the vote was given, however, and at some future time the subject will be reopened. The McGarraghan bill, which was to have been taken up to-day, went over until Monday, and the bill for the extermination of the Russian thistle shared like fate.

Washington, March 24.—In the house the Democrats were again without a quorum, and the attempt to consider the O'Neil-Joy contested election case was abandoned until next week. The unanimous report of the elections committee in the Wheatley-Cobb case confirming the title of the sitting member to his seat was adopted and the military academy appropriation bill was passed practically without debate. The military academy bill carries $400,438, a reduction of $32,000, compared with the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year.

Washington, March 25.—The McGarrahan bill was taken up in the senate as unfinished business. There will be an effort to dispose of this bill before the close of the week, and Senator Hansbrough has given notice that he will again call up the Russian thistle bill immediately after the disposal of the McGarrahan bill. Senator Dolph also intends to make an effort, if the occasion occurs, to have the bill for relief of certain settlers on the public lands considered. The fortifications appropriation bill is now on the calendar and in position to be taken up for action at any time. This is District of Columbia day in the house. According to the arrangement made Friday, the O'Neil-Joy contested election case will be called up Tuesday. Inasmuch as the Republicans are already committed to the policy of filibustering against the election cases, they will consume the entire week. The Republicans will demand the presence of a Democratic quorum at every state in the parliamentary proceedings.

River Falls Waterworks.

River Falls, Wis., March 26.—A contract has been made by the city fathers with Fairbanks, Morse & Co. of St. Paul for the construction of city waterworks. The price to be paid is $17,960. It is proposed to build a large reservoir on one of the mounds north of the city which will furnish sufficient pressure for fire purposes, and to lay pipes down the principal streets, with branches across the main stream and the South fork. With a good system of waterworks supplied with the most wholesome artesian well water, River Falls has another attraction to parties desiring suburban residences within easy reach of the Twin Cities.

Much Damage at Crookston.

Crookston, Minn., March 26.—Last night this city was visited by the severest wind storm of many years. It showed all day, and about 9 o'clock the wind increased and did not abate until to-day. Several buildings are unroofed, among them being the jail. Several large windows in store rooms were crushed in, and the damage in the city is great. The storm was general in this section, and farmers are reported heavy losers in buildings and stock. Trains from the West are twenty-four hours late.

Smallpox Among Chinamen.

Vancouver, B. C., March 26.—Smallpox has broken out among seventy-seven Chinamen cooped in the Canadian Pacific bonded warehouse in bond for Portland, Seattle, San Francisco and New York and other American cities. Six loads of Mongolians went east on the arrival of the steamer. It is thought that the authorities will be able to prevent the further spread of the disease.

WOULD IMPEACH HIM.

Ladies are After Col. Breckinridge of Kentucky.

New York, March 26.—The action of the National Christian League for the Promotion of Social Purity in reference to the Breckinridge-Pollard case is likely to call forth similar expressions from various parts of the country. Mrs. Elizabeth R. Grannis, president of the league, explains the matter thus: "No formal resolutions were adopted. We simply voted unanimously that this man ought to be deposed from the high position he has attained on account of the wrong he has done to the marriage relation, to society and to the state. There are too many Col. Breckinridges and Miss Pollards in Washington. We did not do anything to express our sympathy with Miss Pollard, but when the trial is over we shall do whatever is the proper thing. We don't know that there is any law by which Col. Breckinridge can be impeached, but we are going to ask congress to do it anyhow. We are going to see Elbridge T. Gerry and Judge Arnoux, and have everything done as it should be. We are going also to ask Mrs. Breckinridge to renounce her husband, and if she has a spark of womanhood in her she will do it." The annual meeting of the league will be held in the Broadway Tabernacle to-night, and Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Anthony Comstock, Virginia L. Smith and others will speak.

Boston, March 26.—At the meeting of the Woman's Rescue league resolutions were adopted condemning Congressman Breckinridge, and in the somewhat lengthy preamble the members take occasion to emphatically denounce the congressman and brand him as a menace to society and public morals. The resolutions were to the effect that "the Woman's Rescue League of Boston requests the chivalrous people of Kentucky to retire W. C. P. Breckinridge, M. C., to a private life of obscurity and oblivion; that we extend to Madeline Pollard our sympathy."

FORGERIES, FRAUD.

A Fine Condition of Things Unearthed in New York.

Brooklyn, March 26.—Justice Walsh to-day issued warrants for the arrest of Vincenzo de Vito, an Italian banker of New York city, and Valesco Ferrini, his clerk, on charges of subornation of perjury. There is evidence in the district attorney's office that De Vito sold naturalization papers to Italians just landed at from $10 to $15 apiece. The papers are forged and have been used by the Italians to secure employment in city department works. The World devotes an entire page to the development in the case; an organized system of buying and selling citizenship papers obtained by fraud, selling them to aliens not lawfully entitled to be naturalized, and who, having become parties to the fraud, are controlled and driven to the polls like sheep on election day. The article further states that when these aliens return to their own country the bogus papers are bought back at a big discount and sold again to new arrivals. This nefarious business is said to be carried on so boldly and with so little attempt at concealment that there is every reason to believe that they enjoy the confidence of and have been promised protection by the political leaders to whom they throw the votes thus illegitimately made.

Many Cattle Perish.

Buffalo, Wyo., March 26.—Last week's blizzard, continuing seventy hours, has never been approached in severity by any other storm in this locality. Traffic is entirely suspended and communication by wire with the outside world has only just been restored. Snow is drifted from ten to twenty feet deep in every direction. The mail coach took five days making one trip from Clearmont, thirty miles. The loss of stock is terrible. In one herd near Buffalo containing stock which had been fed all winter over 20 per cent perished. The loss of range stock will likely be one-half, which will leave scarcely any stock in the country by spring. The tremendous snowfall insures wonderful grazing next season, and thousands of head of stock will be driven into the country.

An Iowa Woman Suicides.

Jacksonville, Ill., March 26.—Mrs. W. H. Hall, a resident of Osceola, Iowa, who has been here for treatment for insanity, drowned herself in the city distributing reservoir to-day. She has appeared rational lately, and had been given her liberty.

Found Dead.

Minneapolis, March 26.—William Tupper, an employe of E. R. Priebe, wood and coal dealer, was found dead in the office this morning by another of the employes. Tupper had opened the office, and it is not known whether death was due to natural causes or not, although such is presumed to be the case. Coroner Spring will investigate.

No Longer Boycotted.

Butte, Mont., March 26.—The boycott on the Armour Packing company's products has been declared off by the trades and labor assembly of this city.

SOME SHARP CROOKS

NEW GAME PLAYED BY SWINDLERS IN NEW YORK.

They Advertise Two Bicycles for Sale Cheap and Demand $5 With Which to Pay the Freight—They Rope in a Number of Suckers.

New York, March 26.—The police think they have unearthed a swindle by which some shrewd crooks in this city have managed to get money from people in other towns. On the 18th inst. an advertisement appeared in the Boston Herald, in which George Goodwin, of 46 West 125th street, New York, offered two Columbia bicycles for sale for $135. John Mooney of Boston answered the advertisement, and received a reply from "Rev." George Goodwin, in which the writer said that the bicycles had been given to him and his wife by his congregation. He had suffered from a rupture and wanted to sell the bicycles quickly. To pay the costs of transportation Mr. Mooney was asked to send $5 and the rest could be paid on the arrival of the bicycles in Boston. Mr. Mooney sent the money, but never heard from the "Rev." Mr. Goodwin again. He then sent the letter he had received from Goodwin to his brother, C. W. Mooney, of 120 St. Nicholas avenue, New York, asking him to call on Mr. Goodwin. Mr. Mooney found that Goodwin's address, 46 West 125th street, was a second-hand book store. A young lady, the proprietor said, always called for Mr. Goodwin's mail. The police were notified and two detectives watched the young lady, who came to the book store yesterday and received fourteen letters for Mr. Goodwin. She was locked up, but refused to say anything about herself or Mr. Goodwin. One of the letters she received was registered. It was from W. H. Lambert, Rockbridge, Pawtucket, R. I. Others were from Foxboro, Walpole and Worcester, Mass. The detectives are looking further into the case.

OFF FOR WASHINGTON.

Coxey's Army Begins Its Tramp to the Capital.

Canton, Ohio, March 26.—In the face of a sharp, cold wind that brought shivers to the frames of well clad people, Coxey's army marched eight miles to-day on the road to Washington. There were a few less than a hundred of them. Not to exceed a dozen had overcoats or gloves. They had slept last night on pallets of straw in the airy and cheerless circus tent, and they were greeted this morning by the disagreeable discovery that no detailed arrangements had been made for feeding them. Several hundred persons watched their departure from Massillon. About 3,000 persons assembled at the temporary camp at Reedurban, and a host greeted the crusaders at Canton. A heavy snow storm set in before the details of the camp had been completed, and the trampers are huddled around roaring camp fires. About two-thirds of the men enlisted made the trip. Coxey has buried his disappointment over the non-appearance of the myriad he expected, and is exultant over the handful who reported for business.

FELL INTO THE SEA.

An Aeronaut Falls Fifteen Hundred Feet to His Death.

Cannes, March 26.—An immense crowd gathered here to-day to witness a balloon ascent by the aeronaut Wilton, who is well known in America. No car was attached to the balloon, and Wilton ascended hanging to a rope. When fifteen hundred feet high the balloon was caught in a current of air that carried it rapidly seaward. It was apparent that Wilton could not control the valve at the top of the balloon, which, had it been opened, would have allowed the gas to escape and the balloon to gradually descend. For some unexplainable reason, the aeronaut let go his hold of the rope from which he was dangling, and his body shot down into the sea with frightful velocity. The accident occurred in full view of the spectators, and a number of women in the crowd fainted away. A number of pleasure boats hurriedly made their way to the place where Wilton had fallen, and after a short search his body was recovered. His death must have been almost instantaneous.

TALK OF LOCHREN.

As a Member of the Interstate Commission.

Washington, March 26.—Judge Lochren's name is being considered by the president in connection with the vacancy on the interstate commerce commission. This information, first gained from a member of congress, was afterward confirmed by a gentleman occupying a responsible position under the commission. It is said that while the judge is not making a fight for the place and has, indeed, said a good word for another gentleman who has been mentioned, he would gladly accept the transfer. The appointment, to be sure, is only to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge McDill, but the latter had served only a little more than a year of the six years' term, and the new appointee will hold until Dec. 31, 1898, or almost two years into the next administration.

Quiet at Bluefields.

Colon, March 26.—The British cruiser Canada, Capt. Wilson commanding, arrived here to-day from Bluefields, Nicaragua. He reports that everything was quiet when he left there. Great interest was manifested at Bluefields as to the decision of the question between the United States and Great Britain regarding the landing of British sailors and marines on Nicaragua territory. The Canada came to this port for the purpose of sending a cable dispatch to the British admiral.

Under the Wheels.

Bismarck, N. D., March 26.—John Brown, a Russian laborer, was instantly killed in the railroad yards here to-day. He attempted to jump off a moving freight train, lost his balance and fell under the wheels. His head was crushed and death came instantly.

Population of St. Louis.

St. Louis, March 26.—According to an estimate based on the number of names in the new city directory to be issued in a few days, the population of St. Louis is placed at nearly 600,000.

I have derived a great benefit from Beggs. Blood Purifier and Blood Maker and will take great pleasure in recommending it to all I meet.—Chas Hill, Aberdeen, O. —for sale by J. L. Johnson Druggest.

There is but one product in the world the price of which is sustained and arbitrarily advanced by legislation and that is gold, and it is made the measure of all values. The world will never be prosperous under such a one-sided, lop-sided, cross-eyed system and time will prove it. Farm, Stock and Home.

Who can point out the cause of the financial depression? George Gould says it is the hostility to corporations the farmer says it is the low price of wheat, the silver men say it is the action of Wall street, Wall street says it is the action of silver men, manufacturers say it is the fear of free trade, the consumer says it is the tariff, the capitalist says it is the exhorbitant demand of labor, the laborer says it is the oppression of capital, the debtor says it is the creditor, the creditor says it is the debtor, the democrat says it is the republican the republican says it is the democrat, the populist says it is both, the prohibitionist says it is whisky and the preacher says it is the devil. —Ex.

At a recent business convention Governor Francis, of Missouri who is in a position to know whereof he speaks paid tribute to the local newspaper as follows: Each year the local paper gives from $500 to $5,000 in free lines to the community in which it is located. No other agency can or will do this. The editor in proportion to his means does more for his town than any other ten men, in all fairness the paper ought to be supported not because you like him or admire his writings, but because the local paper is the best investment a community can make. It may not be brilliantly edited or crowded with thought, but financially it is of more benefit to the community than the teacher or preacher. Understand me, I do not mean mentally or morally, but financially, and yet on the moral question you will find most of the local papers on the right side. Today the editors of the home papers do the most for the least money of any people on earth."

Chicago March 22. Prendergast, the murderer of Carter H. Harrison, has another lease of life. By an almost unprecedented plan of procedure his attorneys managed, late last night, to secure him a fortnight's respite during which a jury will pass upon his sanity.

When the federal judges announced that they would not grant a writ of habeas corpus the assassin's attorneys renewed their efforts by raising the question of their client's sanity. The point now raised is that Prendergast has become insane since the trial. So they applied to Judge Chetlain, and he consented to hear arguments to show that he could properly take the matter up. Having heard the arguments Judge Chetlain announced his decision extending the time of the execution of the sentence two weeks to April 6 and setting the commencement of the trial of the question as to his sanity on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock,—Daily Times.

Among the successful exhibits of dentistry at the world's fair was one sent here by Dr. Carrie Wolfsbruck, the only female practicing graduate of the New York College of Dentistry. Her office is at 454 Lexington avenue, where she may be found every afternoon hard at work, for the pretty young tooth doctor has a lucrative practice. She is a plump little woman, with big blue eyes, an abundance of brown hair and a rose-leaf complexion. Most of her patients are men and she prefers them to members of her own sex. "They are," she says "much nicer to deal with" than women—less cranky, and not nearly so apt to growl about the bill. Sometimes the men ask her if she thinks she is strong enough to do the work, and Dr. Carrie says grimly that this question is never asked by a patient except on the occasion of a first visit; after that they know better. Then again most men are in mortal terror of a dentist, and generally think that a woman will treat them more gently. She declares that the greatest cowards she has to deal with are doctors and dentists, and she finds great amusement in hearing their appeals that she be merciful and let them off as easily as she can. Her opinion is that men and women are both terribly vain, about equal proportions of the sexes coming to her with requests for impossible professional help in the direction of improving their appearance. Some of them even ask her to change the shape of their mouths. Dr. Wolfsbruck shows several scars on her plump hands, souvenirs of snapping jaws of patients either under the influence of gas or simply when particularly anxious to close their mouths.

Shoes for Springtime.

A woman's congress shoe of the whole foxed variety of bright dongola is produced, says the Shoe and Leather Reporter. The foxing at the back extends tapering to the top of the shoe and at the front is tipped with patent leather. The top is of plain light-colored cloth, with goring to match it in color. This is in imitation button style, the scalloped button piece forming the seam line against the goring at the front, and the extension of the foxing to the seam line at the back. By this method the shoe is simplified as to the number of pieces required for the top and a minimum of seams is obtained. With medium heel and a narrow, rounded toe the shoe is neat in appearance. A similar shoe is of French kid, the difference being that the handsome, broad button piece is of this bright leather, instead of cloth, forming a pretty contrast to the dull black goring, instead of matching it as in the former. A sample shoe, with a pretty name, is low cut and a combination of button and lace fasteners, of soft, black kid. Down the front is a line of scalloped-edge open work, to show the stocking of the wearer. The elaborate and broad button piece has three diamond-edged points, corresponding to the three buttons, and a circular hole is made below each button, through which also the hosiery is visible when on the foot. It is a broad, perforated heel foxing of the same material.

How to Dress Calves.

Calves from three to six weeks old, and weighing about 100 lbs., or say from 80 to 120 lbs., are the most desirable weights for shipment. The head should be cut out, so as to leave the hide of the head on the skin. The legs should be cut off at the knee joint. The entrails should be removed, excepting the kidneys; the liver, lights and heart should be taken out. Cut the carcass open from the neck through the entire length—from head to bumgut. If this is done they are not so apt to sour and spoil during hot weather. Many a fine carcass has spoiled in hot weather because not cut open. Don't wash the carcass out with water, but wipe out with a dry cloth. Don't ship until the animal heat is entirely out of the body, and never tie the carcass up in a bag, as this keeps the air from circulating, and makes the meat more liable to become tainted. Mark for shipment by fastening a shipping tag to the hindleg. Calves under 50 lbs., should not be shipped, and are liable to be condemned by the health officers as being unfit for food. Merchants, too, are liable to be fined, if found selling these slunks, for violation of the law. Very heavy calves, such as have been fed on buttermilk, never sell well; they are neither veal nor beef.

Novel Though not Pretty.

When a desire for novelty takes a firm hold of any woman her taste and judgment take flight, says the New York World. Here is a novelty—a French one, and one worn by a Parisian actress. The bodice is of gray broadcloth, closely braided with gold cord. It is tight fitting and is trimmed in front by wide revers and in the back by a big graceless sailor collar. The fronts of the sleeves are of the braided material and the back of the plain. But it is in the skirt that ugliness reaches its climax. A piece of the braided cloth is fitted closely about the hips, curving from a depth of twenty inches in front to ten in the back. It clings tightly to the figure and fastens in the back with two large buttons, and from it falls a deep ruffle of the plain cloth which forms the rest of the skirt.

The Lady Lecturer.

One of the latest and most popular developments of society is the lady lecturer, who talks to an exclusively female audience upon the topics of the day. These "talks" as they are called, are held only in private drawing rooms, and are listened to with the most intelligent interest by a score or more of ladies who have clubbed together to engage some well informed woman to post them on all subjects with which they should be conversant. It is a charming way to acquire knowledge and one which will undoubtedly grow more and more popular among those who either have not time or the inclination to study for themselves.

Those Sensational Newspapers.

Mr. Reader—The papers mention a number of instances in which labor unions have loaned money to employers, in order to keep the works running during the dull times.

Mrs. Reader—Yes, I noticed that; but I don't believe it.

"Why not?"

"I told Bridget about it, and asked her to lend me some money to pay her wages, and she got as mad as a hornet."—New York Weekly.

Many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another from heart disease, another from liver or kidney disease, another from nervous exhaustion, or prostration, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present, alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent, or over-busy doctor, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some womb disorder. The physician, ignorant of the cause of suffering, encourages his practice until large bills are made. The suffering patient gets no better, but probably worse by reason of the delay, wrong treatment and consequent complications. A proper medicine, like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause, would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms and instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery.

The lady whose portrait heads this article is Mrs. Ida Coventry, of Huntsville, Logan County, Ohio. She had an experience which we will permit her to relate in her own language. It illustrates the foregoing. She writes: "I had 'female weakness' very bad—in bed most of the time, dragging down pains through my back and hips; no appetite; no energy. The family physician was treating me for 'liver complaint'. I did not get any better under that treatment so I thought I would try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I felt better before I used one bottle of each. I continued their use until I took six bottles of each. In three months' time I felt so well I did not think it necessary to take any more. In childbirth it does what Dr. Pierce recommends it to do—lessens the pain and perils to both mother and child and shortens 'labor'. I would like to recommend Dr. Pierce's Extract of Smart-Weed to those who have never tried it; it surely is the best thing for cholera morbus, or pain in the stomach I ever used; it works like a charm. I try never to be without it."

The following is from Mrs. Harriet Hards, of Montpelier, Idaho: "I have enjoyed better health since I began treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for leucorrhea and uterine debility than I have for sixteen years. I am cured of my trouble, and now weigh one hundred and sixty-six pounds, whereas my weight for many years stood at one hundred and twenty-five pounds. With pleasure, I remain."

Yours truly,

Mrs. Harriet Hards

The following is from Mrs. M. A. McAllister, of Lim Rock, Jackson Co., Ala.: "I was in bad health; age was working upon me, and I had ulceration of the womb; could not get about. I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it cured me; I felt ten years younger. I have not had any return of my trouble. I am the mother of thirteen children and I am fifty-three years old, have never seen a better woman's friend than your medicine. I have recommended it to my friends here, and it has never failed in any case, so let me thank you for the good it did me." Yours truly,

M. A. McAllister

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, general housekeepers, and overworked and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent specific for all those chronic weaknesses and diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It cures weakness of the stomach, indigestion, bloating, nervous prostration, hysteria, debility and sleeplessness. A Treatise (168 pages, illustrated), on "Woman and Her Diseases," sent sealed in plain envelope, on receipt of ten cents to pay postage. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y. It contains a vast number of testimonials with half tone, or phototype portraits of their authors and gives the full address of each.

THOSE GUILELESS SOUTHRONS.

O Abram Stevens Hewitt!
How could you ever do it?
How could you speak as you did about the Southern men?
When a gentleman a guest is
And the general request is
That he should speak up cheerful should he then Pitch into folks as if he
Would flay them in a jiffy?
O Abram Stevens Hewitt, you shall never speak again
At any jovial banquet
And throw a big wet blanket
On unsuspecting, guileless Southern men.

HER CONFESSION.

"Do I believe the opal is a gem of ill-omen? Do I believe in life, in love, in music? Have I any little pet belief that is dear to my soul? Let me tell you a story for answer."

"Then let us go out and stroll on the piazza. It is pleasanter there than here in the ball-room and vastly better for conversation. Besides, I think you are tired of dancing."

"No, I never tire of that; the waltz is the path to paradise for me. But I will go outside with you, for it is very warm here."

The long piazza faced the beach and the music and lapping waves mingled with the strains that came floating out from where the dancers gayly circled. The air from the sea blew soft and warm and the moon and the stars shone down with a soft radiance. Yet Miss Merton shivered a little as the salt wind touched her and drew her filmy mantle closer about her white shoulders.

"We will go inside if you are cold," said her companion, noticing the movement—"Perhaps you are not used to the night air."

"No. It always make me cold to think of an opal. They call the light in them 'fire' but it chills me instead of warming. And they are changing and treacherous as the sea yonder."

"The sea has been my very good friend," said the other; "I have found that its changes rests me."

"That is all very well for a man, lieutenant. But a woman needs something different from men. There should be nothing in their lives to disturb its calm. That is why I hate opals—one did that for a friend of mine."

The young officer laughed gently. "Fancy will do much for a woman," he said.

"If you are going to laugh and fling at our sex I have done!" said Miss Merton. "I can find better amusement than being laughed at in the ball-room."

"I beg your pardon. I will be very good," he answered contritely.

For a few moments they walked on silently until they were at the farthest end of the piazza. Then Miss Merton began her story. Her voice was low and musical and at first Lieut. Phelps—who had long been beyond the sound of any woman's voice whatever—was content simply to listen to its smooth flow. But she had only spoken a few words before he began to find her story of absorbing interest.

"This opal," said Miss Merton, "was given by a man to the woman whom he said he loved. The man believed in the evil power of the stone. Now, sir, you may laugh and have your fling at us. He was afraid of it, but she was not. When he told her to choose she asked for that and he gave it to her, with many a caution. 'If any harm comes of it harm will come to us,' he told her. 'You must never let it be upon the hand of another, for then that one will come between us.'

"She promised of course, but she was young and careless and did not believe in looking at the serious side of life when there was a brighter and better one to see.

"The stone was very beautiful. In its depths it held all the glowing colors of the furnace. It was changeable as the chameleon. It fascinated me when I looked at it, but frightened me because it was so inconstant. As I told you my friend was young. She had not yet learned how very serious a matter life is. The ring kept other men away from her, curtailed her pleasures, her freedom.

Her companion began some protest, but Miss Merton stopped him.

"Yes; I know what you are going to say—that she should have reckoned upon that—that she would not have cared if she really loved him. But you cannot change the nature of a girl in a day. She found that the ring narrowed her life and so one day she put it away.

"If she was not willing to wear it she should have given it back to the man who gave it to her," said the lieutenant.

"He would have misunderstood it," said Miss Merton. "He would have said that she did not care for him—that she had never loved him, that she had played him false—and all the other nice things men tell the women they love whenever their point of view happens to be different. So the poor girl did what she thought was best and laid the ring away and met him one night without it upon her hand. I don't know what he said to her, but he was so brutal about it that the girl's proud spirit rebelled, as it should have done. Then she brought the ring to me.

"'Helen,' she said, 'I know you love me. I can trust you. He said that if any other wore it that one would come between us. Now, I want to show him how silly his superstition is. I want the ring but I do not want it to be my tyrant. Take it and wear it to-night and let him see it on your hand. And (Miss Merton's voice grew very soft) you won't come between us, will you, sweetheart?' she added, kissing me."

Miss Merton paused and they both stood silent and looked out upon the sea, bathed in its glorious moonlight, for a long time. The lady stole a glance at the man's face to see if he took any interest in her story. But it told no more than the white walls of the great hotel in whose shadow they stood.

When she resumed, her voice had lost its mellow sweetness and had taken instead a hard worldliness that grated on his ear like music out of tune.

"I did not mean to be false to her. I should not be telling you this now if I could not say that honestly. But when she gave me the opal she tempted me. She said: 'See how it glows, Helen, like fire. I think he is like that. If I am not careful I will get singed in the flame.'

"I had never been without men about me, but they were little men. There was no fire in them and I thought I should at last like to play with the flame—although I knew it burned for another.

"That evening I wore the ring and Harry Germain saw it on my hand. I told him whose it was and why I wore it.

"'This is capital,' he said, 'let me wear it and it will serve its purpose better still. If he sees me have it he will be insanely jealous.' I hesitated but a moment and gave it to him."

Perhaps it was because Lieut. Phelps was absent-minded, for he dropped the hand that had been resting on his arm and leaned back against one of the pillars of the piazza.

"I knew," continued Miss Merton, "that if he were jealous the flame would be easily kindled for me to play with, but I did not think of what might follow. He saw the ring and went at once to Agnes.

"'You have given the ring to Harry Germain!' he said. She was frightened at his brusqueness and faltered in her speech. 'Oh, don't trouble to deny it,' he said; 'I have just seen it on his hand. I thought there was some one between us. I know it now.' Then, without another word, he turned away from her. Her first impulse was to follow him—to call out, to cry to him that it was all a mistake. But then her pride revolted and when Harry Germain came up and asked her to dance she went off with him, laughing as brightly as she ever had. And he saw them together and saw that Germain still wore his ring."

"And you?" queried the lieutenant. "I hope you won that for which you played?" His tone was icily courteous, but he looked out to sea instead of toward his companion.

"He went away that night," she replied. "I never saw him again until to-day."

Again they stood silent and looked at the sea and the sky, but not at each other. Presently the man spoke.

"Where is she now?"

"In the ball-room by this time. She said she would come down later."

"Did she know that you were going to tell me this?"

"No."

He turned and left her without a word—walked rapidly down the long piazza and she saw him disappear within one of the low windows. Then she sighed wearily.

"I only told him half the truth," she said. "I wonder if it would have been better to have told him all? She can never care for him as I do."

The lieutenant stopped to give one swift glance about, then walked straight across the polished floor. In front of Agnes Wilton he stopped again and looked at her quietly a moment before he spoke. In that moment he had time to see that an opal glowed like a coal of living fire upon her hand.

She looked up and met his glance steadily, but she was very pale.

"There is a legend," he said, bending toward her, "that if the love that gave it grows cold the opal's fire will grow dim. Do you believe it?"

"Yes," she answered, so low that he could just hear the words, "but mine never has grown dim. Its fire has warmed me through all the long years—oh, so long," she said. "Each one longer than the other. But I knew you would come—the opal told me."

A little later some one said:

"Why, there is Jack Phelps dancing with Agnes Wilton! They quarreled desperately three years ago and she sent him away. But he is back, like a moth to the candle."

"The candle," said another, "is that magnificent opal ring that she wears. Jack gave it to her and it has never left her hand since he went away."

"Nevertheless," said Miss Merton, to whom the conversation was half addressed, "the opal is a stone of evil omen. I would not wear one for the world." And although the night was warm, she shivered again.

BLOODY BATTLES OF EUROPE.

At Zorndorf, the Loss of Life Included About One-Half the Contestants.

Linear tactics and fire-locks contributed more lavishly to the death-roll than the skirmishers and breechloaders of modern times, says the Saturday Review. At Blenheim England lost some 23 per cent and her enemies about the same number. At Mollwitz the Prussians lost 18 per cent, the Austrians 28 per cent. At Kolin Frederick's force suffered to the extent of 37 per cent, while the victory cost his enemies only 14 per cent. At Zorndorf, the bloodiest battle of which we have any record that we may rely upon, the proportion of loss to the total forces engaged rose to the enormous total of from one-half to one-third. Kunersdorf was almost as destructive to human life, and Frederick lost 35 per cent against 26 per cent of the allies. With the advent of Napoleon and the loosened formations of the revolutionary armies, losses were at first diminished, but at Aspern the Austrians left nearly 28 per cent of their men on the battlefield and the French, although the bulletins denied it, are said to have been weaker by one-half after the battle. Borodino, too, deprived the Russians of 36 per cent and the French of 25 per cent. During the Napoleonic wars we find the losses lower, although after Ligny the Prussians were weaker by as many as 20 per cent, and the victory of Waterloo cost England rather more than that proportion. When, however, we turn to the campaigns which succeeded the lull of exhaustion following the downfall of the first empire, we are confronted with no such bloody records, in spite of the invention of percussion caps, rifles, and even rifled cannon. The allies at the Alma only lost some 6 per cent and the Russians 14 per cent. Inkerman, however, was as bloody as Waterloo, but it was a struggle in which tactics played a very small part. The losses at Magenta and Solferino were comparatively slight. Although the consequences of Koniggratz were immense, they were cheaply purchased by the victors; while in 1870, notwithstanding that both sides were armed with breech loaders, the losses never approached the huge totals of some of the battles of the early century or of those of the seven years' war. At Worth, it is true, one-sixth of the total forces engaged were either killed or wounded; but at Gravelotte the proportion was only one-eleventh, and at Weissenburg one-twelfth.

Footsore Fagin's Latest Idea.

When the cook opened the door to the timid knock of the peripatetic without she found him meekly waiting.

"Good morning," he said. "Have you an old Sunday school book about the house I could take?"

The cook was knocked plumb speechless.

"A Sunday school book?" she gasped.

"Yes miss," he replied.

"What in the name of goodness do you want with that?"

"You see, miss, it's this way," he said in explanation. "When I was a little boy and read that story of Jonah swallowing the whale I used to have some doubts about it. Here lately, though, I've got so holler myself that I kinder thought I'd like to read it over again and see if it wasn't a good deal easier to believe."

"What a dandy you are," exclaimed the cook looking him over carefully. "Come in here by the fire and I'll fill you up to the neck.—Detroit Free Press.

No Objection.

Mr. Roby—Do you regard marriage as a lottery, Miss Lastchance?

Miss Lastchance—Certainly not. I think a lottery is horrid.

A MINNEAPOLIS MIRACLE.

THE REMARKABLE CURE OF J. B. WHITE, OF THIS CITY.

A Cripple for Two Years Pronounced Incurable by Physicians and Given Up by His Friends to Die—How He Obtained Relief and Became a Well Man—His Daughter's Marvelous Improvement.

Since Pasteur's famous system of inoculation for hydrophobia was published, nothing in medical annals has equaled in interest the new system of nerve restoration which is now being extensively used in the country. The following interview with J. B. White, of 1201 Third street northeast, this city, furnishes a partial exposition of the matter:

"I am a native of Shediac, New Brunswick, and of French descent. I have been in Minneapolis for many years. I am now 60 years old. I fell from a building two years ago and broke my thigh, besides injuring myself internally. The doctors could do nothing for me but let the bones grow together as best they could. When I was able to walk on crutches I came near dying from the complications of troubles that had set in after the fall. For one year and a half I walked on crutches, striving in vain to find some relief from the misery I felt night and day. The worst part of my afflictions was that I could not eat anything. If I could have taken nourishment and kept it down I could have stood the pain better. I had four doctors and kept taking all sorts of medicines. I had to stop all of them or I would have been a dead man. I would be troubled so with headaches, and my hips would pain me so that I often thought I should go crazy. I was so emaciated that there was nothing to me but skin and bone. Last summer I felt as if I was nearly dead. My kidneys then began to bother me. I got so I could not sleep only at intervals. Finally I gave up in despair. One day I was reading our French paper, and the first thing I saw was a long article about the miraculous cure of a cripple. I read on and one becoming more interested than ever. The patient described in the article said that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People cured him. The story aroused my interest and I induced my druggist to send for them. I did not expect relief right away, but soon they made the headache pass away. People laughed at me when I began to take the pills, telling me I was taking so much candy. But the day I threw away the crutches they thought different. I am now well and hearty as a young man of twenty-five."

At this juncture his married daughter, Mrs. N. White, came into the store. "There," said he, "is another case. She has tried them, too." The reporter thought it would be a good idea to speak of her case also, since it was a woman's. Mrs. White married a man of the same name as her father, so this accounts for the same name.

"The doctors," she said, "told me I had uterine trouble. I was in a miserable condition. Nothing that I took could alleviate the pains I would feel in my limbs and abdomen. I often had fluttering of the heart, and frequent weak spells. I would eat, but it would do me no good. I could not sleep. I was in misery and despair. Father's improvement was so rapid that I thought I would take Pink Pills, too. At first I felt worse, and then began to mend so rapidly that I was astonished. I have taken seven boxes and am now nearly well. I can do my own work and can sleep well. In the mornings I feel refreshed after a night's rest."

August Grotefend, druggist, at 1011 Main street northeast, corroborated what Mr. White had said above in regard to his condition, saying, "I have sold a great many since these cures. Some of the lumbering men going in the woods have taken half dozen box lots of these pills with them. They certainly have done a wonderful lot of good and should have the entire credit of the cures."

An analysis of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills shows that they contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood. Pink pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, (50 cents a box or 6 boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., or Brockville, Ontario.—From the Minneapolis Journal.

Horses at Present.

But few farmers will readily part with their best horses this spring. With the dull times, however, some have thought that it does not pay to feed or even graze the ordinary colt for another year and are disposed to sell at a sacrifice. This spirit tends only to lower values still more. If it is the prevailing sentiment in a community the result is to cause owners to think less of their best horses. For two years past, interest in farm stock has declined and has it would seem, now reached the lowest mark. Confidence in the future and in improved stock are the only things which will now advance prices.

All farm stock is much depressed and it appears that there is as good prospects for the horse trade several years from now as for any animals. Other stock when ready for market must be sold whatever the prices at the time for fatted animals are held at a loss. The good horse on the other hand can pay part if not all of his keep with work. This training will add to his value whether sold at home or in a distant market. In the hands of a skilled horseman promising brood mares may now be of greater value than any other domestic animals. To almost any farmer the choice mare is worth much more than is now offered for her if bred with care and her produce judiciously handled. Try to obtain the best in blood and individuality.

Taken at His Word.

A Texas school teacher lost one of his scholars very suddenly and unexpectedly. The class was parsing a sentence.

"What is the imperative of the verb to go?" asked the teacher.

"I dunno."

"Go!"

"Thank you!" murmured the lad as he shot out of the door before the teacher could prepare his veto message.

Dairy Congress Resolutions.

The objects of the dairy congress, as set forth in the second article of their constitution, are enlarged upon in the resolution passed just before adjournment. They are as follows:

Whereas, This convention recognizes the importance of the home dairy as being the primary condition of the dairy industry in all new and sparsely settled communities, of necessity going before and forming the basis of all subsequent co-operative work; therefore,

Resolved, That this association will in all legitimate ways encourage the the establishment of dairy schools, and in all judicious ways use the influence of this association for the purpose of carrying light and help to the isolated dairy farmer.

Resolved, That we extend the hand of friendship to our sister organization, the National Dairy Union, which is working for the purpose of securing national and state legislation to protect the dairymen of the United States against the sale of counterfeit food products made in imitation or semblance of pure butter or cheese. We accept with thanks its assurance of co-operation, and wish it Godspeed in the work it has undertaken.

Resolved, That we view with favor the bill introduced in the United States senate in January by Senator Hill (Senate bill No. 1,316), it being a bill to place oleomargarine and all imitation butter and cheese under the control of the laws of the several states, even when it is in the package in which it may be imported into any state. We urge upon congress its early enactment.

Women in Banks.

Atlanta, Ga., has a banking company whose vice president, Mrs. John Keeley, modestly says that her position is solely complimentary and without compensation. The bank is a family bank and represents an estate. Mrs. Keeley's husband was vice president, but at his death, which occurred six years ago, his wife was elected to fill the position. Mrs. Keeley adds: "I think there are many positions in banks which could be filled as well by women as by men, and I wonder that they have not been employed in that way long before."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured.

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portions of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Danger in Perfumes.

Women who are fond of indulging in strong perfumes should remember that they are decidedly injurious to the sense of smell. By their frequent use the secretory glands of the nose and throat are overtaxed and weakened. One day the person notices that the hearing is less acute than usual, and this sense of smell seems defective. This is of course put down to a cold, and but little is thought of it. After a time the entire head becomes affected and there are throat and lung complications, which are likely to end in chronic, if not fatal illness. Smelling salts are a prolific cause of deafness; all strong and pungent odors, particularly those which act upon the secretory processes, should be avoided as far as possible.

TALKS BY M'KINLEY

OHIO'S GOVERNOR MAKES THREE SPEECHES IN MINNEAPOLIS.

An Address at the West, Another Before the State Republican League and the Third at a Mass Meeting—President Goodnow Re-Elected.

Minneapolis, March 29. — It was a great day for Minneapolis and the Republican party of Minnesota. Gov. McKinley and party arrived on schedule time and were driven to the West hotel, and soon the rotunda was filled with an enthusiastic crowd, which began cheering for McKinley. The governor, when he made his appearance, was greeted with deafening cheers. He made a brief speech, predicting Republican success. After dinner the governor was driven to the exposition hall, where the state convention of Republican League clubs was in session. Here he was given an ovation.

Gov. Nelson, in introducing Gov. McKinley, referred to the six years he had served in congress with the gentleman from Ohio, but made no further reference to tariff legislation.

Mayor Eustis, on being introduced by John Goodnow, made only brief remarks, but what he said was to the point.

"I speak," he said, "for this great city and this great Northwest. Both are proud to welcome here the great governor of Ohio. I am not here to make a speech, but it is not too much for me to say that Minnesota will give the Republican cause in November a majority of $75,000, and two years hence we will roll up for McKinley a majority of 100,000."

Gov. McKinley responded with a short speech. In closing, he said: "Minnesota in 1892 gave Gov. Nelson, my old colleague and friend, your governor, in 1892, a year that was not very refreshing for Republicans, 15,000 plurality. You ought to make it 50,000 this year. Ohio gave the Republican ticket in '92 1,000 majority, and last year it gave 80,000. Now if you will equal that percentage this year in Minnesota I will come back to see you again."

Following the address of Gov. McKinley, Secretary Stevens reported for the committee on credentials, announcing that there were 398 clubs represented, with 1,990 delegates.

The election of officers was taken up at this stage of the convention. Department Commander Van Sant, of the G. A. R., in a few well chosen words put in nomination John Goodnow, "the ablest president the state league ever had." The applause was deafening and half a dozen seconds followed in rapid succession. Capt. Van Sant put the motion to elect by acclamation amid an uproar of applause only exceeded by that when McKinley entered the hall. The other officers elected were as follows: Secretary, F. C. Stevens; treasurer, William E. Lee, Long Prairie. Any number of candidates were named as delegates at large to the Denver convention and after some withdrawals the race finally simmered down to the following eight: E. G. Rogers, St. Paul; Capt. S. R. Van Sant, Winona; William T. Coe, Minneapolis; Henry Johns, St. Paul; Dr. Barrett, Tower; George B. Arnold; John Lind, New Ulm; A. R. McGill, St. Paul; R. R. Brower, St. Cloud; Olaf Oleson, Willmar. Henry Johns, Olaf Oleson, John Lind and E. G. Rogers were afterwards elected as congressional delegates, and the remainder were chosen as delegates to the Denver convention. The congressional delegates to the Denver convention, four from each district, were as follows:

First District — L. P. Peck, Kasson; Nathan Kingsley, ———; W. A. Sperry, Owatonna; L. H. Prosser, Fillmore.

Second District—Hays, Brown county; A. H. Fowler, C. S. Eastwood, John Lind, New Ulm.

Third District—Barney Stevens, Farmington; S. H. Rich, Goodhue; Dr. H. O. Smith, Shakopee; Capt. A. H. Reed, Glencoe.

Fourth District—Edward Rogers, C. W. Horr, A. T. Jenks, Henry Johns.

Fifth District—E. W. Mortimer, C. A. Smith, F. T. Gaylord, Andrew B. Robbins, Minneapolis.

Sixth District—H. G. Weir, C. A. French, A. G. Barnard, A. W. McDowell.

Seventh District—J. Gunderson, S. G. Comstock, J. H. Smith, J. F. Stevens.

Exposition hall was packed at night and Gov. McKinley was given another ovation.

A Synopsis of M'Kinley's Speech.

Mr. Chairman, Gentlemen of the Republican League of Minnesota, Ladies and Gentlemen: It is a great cause which would bring together at this season of the year this magnificent assembly of the people. It is because of the deep concern of all of you that that cause shall triumph in the near future, that has brought here representatives from every county in the State of Minnesota. It is a patriotic cause that would bring out hundreds and thousands of the veterans of the war who suffered for the Union when the battle was on, and are now ready to maintain the Union in its hour of peace. My friends much has happened since the great Republican national convention of 1892 assembled in this hall. The platform and candidates of that great convention, admirable as they were, were rejected by the people at the election following; but the people had no sooner spoken than they realized their great mistake—a mistake which they now feel most sensibly and regret most deeply. The principles enunciated at that convention were true then; they are true now. They are as dear to Republicans now as then; they are better understood and more ardently supported by the great body of the people in the year 1894 than they were in the year 1892. While the Republican party failed to carry the election, the cause for which it contended did not fail. It survived the awful disaster and shines more brightly and gloriously than ever before.

The past year has been a long one—the longest since the war. It has been full of changes and experiences which have been impressive and instructive, but expensive. All kinds of business have been seriously disturbed. Investments have been sacrificed; capital has been despoiled of its earnings, and labor, more than all and dearer to us than all, has succumbed to the wasting blasts of the great change by which industry has been cheated of its just rewards. Everything has suffered but the Republican course. Everything has been blighted but Republican principles. They have escaped the mildew which has settled upon everything else. Even the Democratic party has suffered—a calamity we could bear with resignation if it had not also carried in its train the vast and sacred interests of the people.

What were the great principles and policies then enunciated in this hall? Let me enumerate them: A protective tariff, which shall serve the highest interests of American labor and American development; reciprocity, which, while seeking the world's markets for our surplus products, shall not destroy American wages, nor surrender American markets for products which can be made at home; the use of both gold and silver with which to measure the exchanges of the people and cheat nobody; which are the true sources of public authority; the extension of our foreign commerce; the restoration of our merchant marine by home-built ships; the creation of a navy for the protection of our national interests and the honor of our flag; the maintenance of the most friendly relations with all foreign powers and entangling alliances with none; the reaffirmation of the Monroe doctrine, and of our faith in the achievement of the manifest destiny of the republic as the best government of earth in the broadest and truest sense.

Honest Elections,

Who would modify these principles; who would reverse this declared policy; who would strike from the Republican banner a single star or stripe? Like all Republican doctrines they are unchangeable. Upon them the Republican party bases its claim to future supremacy and impatiently awaits the constitutional opportunity to make its appeal to the people.

The Democratic party won in 1892, as in every contest since the war in which it has succeeded, by a campaign of profuse and glittering promises. It now stands demonetized on the field of performance and has, so far, signally failed to redeem a single pledge it made to the people. It has been for many years denouncing the tariff, because some men became rich under its operations and others poor. The first year of Democratic control has cured all that and the prescription has proved quite as effective on the poor as on the rich, for it has involved them all in a common loss. What devastation and distress have been wrought in a single year!

Let the briefest statement of the business condition at the close of the year 1892 be contrasted with a like statement of that condition at the end of 1893. "The year 1892," says Dun's Review of Trade, the best non-partisan authority, "has been the most prosperous ever known in business." This is the business endorsement of thirty years of Republican rule. Now mark the change! Says Dun's Review of Trade for 1893:

"Starting with the largest trade ever known, mills crowded with work and all business stimulated by high hopes, the year 1893 has proven in sudden shrinkage of trade, in commercial disaster and the depression of industries, the worst for fifty years. Whether the final results of the panic of 1837 were relatively more severe, scarcity of records of that time do not clearly show. The year closes with prices of many products the lowest ever known, with millions of workers seeking in vain for work, and with charity laboring to keep back in all our cities. All hope that the new year may bring brighter days, but the dying year leaves only a dismal record. The review of different departments of trade, given to-day exhibits a collapse of industry and business which is almost without precedent. The iron industries sustained a weekly production of 181,551 tons of pig May 1 but by Oct. 1 the output had fallen to 73,895 tons, and the recovery to about 100,000 tons Dec. 1 still leaves 40 per cent of the force unemployed. Over half the woolen manufactories are idle, and, excepting a brief recovery in November, have been ever since new wool came in in May, for all sales in the chief markets in the eight months have been but 100,795,460 pounds, partly for speculation, the price having fallen 20 per cent for fleeces to the lowest point ever known, against 212,320,003 pounds in the same months last year. Sales of cotton goods are fully one-fourth below the usual quantity. The small advance attempted in boots and shoes a year ago was not sustained, but with prices as low as ever the shipments of boots and shoes from Boston are 24 per cent less than last year in December. Not only manufactured goods as a whole, but the most important farm products are so low that farmers find little comfort. Official and other reports deluded traders with the notion that crops of last year were so short that famine prices could be realized."

To add to the perplexities of the situation under the menace of free trade, here described, the Wilson bill, which recently passed the house of representatives at Washington and is now in the hands of the senate, proposes ostensibly to reduce the revenues $76,000,000. The real decrease would eventually, after we became more and more impoverished, be far greater. This is at a time when the expenses of the government far exceed its receipts and when, by reason of such a condition, the secretary of the treasury has been compelled to sell $50,000,000 of government bonds, with the belief in many quarters that this is but the beginning of bond issuing to relieve the daily wants of the government. The sum of $76,000,000 which it is proposed to surrender of the revenues is more than one-third of the entire sum received from customs in the last fiscal year. This reduction is made upon the theory of the Democratic free traders that it will relieve the people of burdensome taxation. Whether it does or not depends. But of one thing we are certain: It has relieved the people of employment, of work, of wages, of prosperity and of plenty—and some of them of their homes. The blessings of good wages, good prices and good times are more to be desired that the proposed relief from so-called "burdensome taxation." Such a relief is no relief.

The Wilson Bill

is not like any of the early tariff measures, but is one in which the changed condition of the country and its marvelous growth and development are utterly ignored and forgotten. Its promoters forget that slavery no longer exists. They do not recognize nor appreciate the independence and dignity of labor, and cannot understand that the protective policy under which we have had such splendid prosperity is not to be determined by geographical lines. The bill is a narrow, sectional and provincial measure, unworthy the great party which proposes it, and wholly unsuited to the needs of the country.

The Wilson bill turns to the past; away from the present. It is for the plantation, not for the farm and factory. As it passed the house it had for its foundation principle free raw material. Its authors argued that with free coal, free iron ore, free lead and free wool, the manufacturers of the United States would be placed on an equality with the manufacturers of free trade countries, and we therefore could not only retain our own markets, but "control the markets of the world." Based upon this argument, which I believe to be false, they declared that with these great primary products free, we would have steady employment for all, the workingmen of the country at good wages. And so in this form the bill passed the Democratic house of representatives, and is now the dread subject of angry contention in the Democratic senate.

Reciprocity.

To my mind, another hurtful provision of the Wilson bill, entirely unwarranted by experience and unjustifiable as a matter of wise international policy, is that which repeals section 3 of the act of 1890, commonly known as the "reciprocity clause." This, it will be remembered, was enacted to secure reciprocal trade between the United States and countries largely producing sugar, molasses, coffee, tea and hides, and under which this country has opened up a foreign trade profitable to the people, and of the most promising proportions.

Commercial agreements relating to reciprocal trade have already been made with the following countries: Brazil, the Dominican Republic, Spain, for Cuba and Porto Rico; Guatemala, Salvador, the German empire, Great Britain, for certain West Indian colonies and British Guiana; Nicaragua, Honduras, and Austro-Hungary. In these arrangements it has been the aim of the government to secure enlarged markets for the products of agriculture, which, added to their splendid home market, would permanently secure them from the occasional depressions which visit our agriculturists, because of their surplus products.

As the result of these commercial arrangements, and for the most part due to them, our trade has shown a gratifying increase. The domestic exports to Germany and Austro-Hungary had increased in value up to December, 1892, from $47,000,000 to $57,000,000, or more than 21 per cent. With American countries the value of our exports had increased up to that date from $44,000,000 to $54,000,000, or upward of 23 per cent. The total increase in the value of exports to all countries with which reciprocal arrangements have been made had been $20,772,621, which sum is chiefly from wheat, flour, meat and dairy products, from lumber and the manufactures of iron and steel. Our imports with these countries have increased also in the same period, consisting of articles which we do not ourselves produce, like sugar, coffee, India rubber and crude drugs.

During the first half of the year 1891 we exported to Cuba 14,000 barrels of flour. During the first half of the year 1892, under the reciprocity clause, we exported to the same country 337,000 barrels. For the year ending August 31, 1891, our total exports to Cuba were $11,000,000. For the corresponding period, ending Aug. 31, 1892, our total exports were $19,700,000, under a law not yet two years in operation. Of this great increase nearly $4,000,000 were in flour, about $2,000,000 were in bacon, pork and other provisions, and a large proportion of the remaining exports were also agricultural products. And yet the Democratic leaders in congress seriously propose to shut the door of this splendid opportunity in the face of the American farmer.

The People Will Have Protection.

I am not here to discuss tariff rates or schedules. These are subject to change up or down, as new conditions require it; but my insistence is, that these changes must ever be governed by the protective principle, and within that principle rates may be, should be and will be amended as time, new processes of manufacture and changed commercial conditions require; but they must not fall below a rate which will adequately measure the difference between the American scale of wages and that of competing countries; and must always be in favor of the labor of our own country and the home market for our people. The principle upon which they were made, is not subject to amendment. The tariff policy of this country must be protective. That is what we contend for—that is what the American people mean to have.

The pretext for the proposed bill is not to raise more revenue. The declaration of its author and the house committee is that it will reduce the revenue. The same effort at tariff reduction has been repeatedly made in the past when we had a surplus revenue in the treasury. The present law was adequate to meet all the expenses of the government, and did meet them for the first two and a half years of its operation. During no year of President Harrison's administration did the receipts fall below the expenses of the government, and when President Harrison went out of power, while his administration had paid off more than $236,000,000 of the principal and interest of the national debt, yet he turned over to the administration which succeeded him a surplus of upwards of $124,000,000, including the reserve fund, which under the Republican policy had never been encroached upon.

The advocates of tariff taxation are divided into two schools. Both schools believe in raising public money by a tariff, and only differ as to the kind of tariff to accomplish this purpose. One school, the Democratic school, advocates a tariff for revenue only; the other, the Republican school, advocates a tariff for revenue and also protection. A revenue tariff has no other aim or purpose and disclaims every other save revenue. A protective tariff, while raising all needed revenue, is ever mindful that the taxes imposed shall be upon those foreign products which will most encourage domestic production and rest most lightly upon the consumer. The revenue tariff is unmindful of the development and prosperity of our country. The protective tariff, while having revenue and the needs of the treasury always in view, steadily keeps in mind our own people. A revenue tariff seeks out articles of prime necessity, often such as we can not produce in our own country, and makes them the subject of taxation. The senate has just introduced an amendment to the Wilson bill which is a striking illustration of a revenue tariff. It takes sugar, an article which enters into every man's household and home, from the free list and places it upon the dutiable list.

A Revenue Tariff

will raise revenue for a time at least, but it is inadequate to encourage, promote and protect production in our own country. Protection seeks out those articles of foreign production which we can produce at home and puts a tariff upon them, and while every importation of such articles produces revenue which goes into the treasury, it at the same time stimulates our domestic production and sustains and defends our domestic enterprises. So long as we have to use the taxing power, why not use it in the interest of our own people and their occupations? What is the gain if we do put money into the public treasury under a revenue tariff and thereby discourage domestic enterprise and destroy the opportunity for capital and labor to earn money? Why tax a foreign article which we cannot produce rather than one which we can? In the former case we help no domestic industry; in the latter our tariffs discriminate against the foreign and in favor of the home product. A tariff levied exclusively for revenue encourages foreign importations—that is what it is made for, and when such a tariff is levied on articles the like of which we produce at home, it discourages our own producers by depriving them of the home market which justly belongs to them. A revenue tariff encourages no home enterprises; it supplies employment to no American workingman; it takes employment from him because in the encouragement of foreign importations it diminishes the demand for American products. To the extent that it diminishes the demand for American products, it diminishes the demand for the American producer. The use of a foreign article, which a Democratic revenue tariff encourages, means less use or no use of a like domestic article. So long as labor is cheaper in Europe and conditions are lower there than here, a free trade or a revenue tariff upon competing goods tends either to destroy domestic production or to level labor and every other condition to the foreign standard. A revenue tariff is an enemy to the American shop, the American workingman, to American prosperity and American industrial independence. It has not a single element of patriotism. It has no national spirit or instinct. To supply the needs of the treasury is its chief and exclusive concern. It has no other. It is a sure precursor of national poverty, national bankruptcy and individual distress. It is the Forerunner of Hard Times.

It is without a single worthy triumph. The years in which it has been tried in the United States excite neither our respect nor pride. It has furnished no inspiring page in our history. Its record has been one of deficient revenues, greater bonded indebtedness and universal want among the people.

What part shall you, my fellow-countrymen of the State of Minnesota, take in the settlement of these great and pressing public questions? May we not hope that the spirit of justice and patriotism which animated you in the critical days of the past, when the people of the Northwest led the hosts of freedom in the great contest with the slave power may still inspire you to even mightier effort in behalf of the fundamental principles of our government, and of our industrial independence and prosperity? Standing before this vast assemblage, I recall the words of William H. Seward, spoken to the people at St. Paul on Sept. 18, 1860, when he said:

"The virtue which is to save this nation must reside in the Northwest. On both sides of this stream are the people who hold in their hands the destinies of the republic. That some great states are to be built up in the valley of the Mississippi I know. You will no longer hear hereafter of the 'Old Dominion State;' dominion passed away from Virginia long ago. Pennsylvania is no longer the keystone of the American Union, for the arch has been extended from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific ocean, and the center of the arch is Moved Westward.

"A new keystone is to be built in that arch. New York will cease to be the Empire State and a new Empire State will grow up in a Northern latitude, where the lands are rich and where the people who cultivates them are all free and all equal. That state which shall be truest to the great fundamental principles of the government, that state which shall be most faithful and most vigorous in developing and perfecting society on those principles—will be at once the new Dominion State, the new Keystone State, the new Empire State."

The question for which the great New York statesman spoke so eloquently has been settled, righteously settled, as he pleaded and prayed it might be; settled in consequence of the decrees of the great campaign in which he spoke; settled by the great liberator for whom he spoke, the immortal Lincoln; settled in eternal justice, for freedom and mankind. Citizenship is no longer unequal and every man is free beneath the flag. The differences existing then are no longer present to impede the progress and unity of the republic, or to stand between us in the realization of its highest interests. Now all sections and all states bow at the shrine of freedom. All have a common and glorious citizenship; all a like interest in the permanency and progress of the Union. The liberty for which Seward spoke has been secured and the Union saved stronger and better than ever. The virtue which is to advance the nation now free to its highest destiny and glory must reside in the people, not of the Northwest alone, but in the people of every part of our common country. The Northwest can be relied upon now and in the future, as in the past, to contribute to the onward march of the best government on the face of the earth.

That Incident.

The emperor and the iron chancellor met.

"You stop," cried his majesty. "The idea. Right before people, too."

The prince laughed lightly.

"Nonsense," he rejoined. "I'm old enough to be your grandfather."

WORK OF CONGRESS

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, March 29. — When the speaker's gavel fell to-day there were less than eighty members on the floor. The house proceeded with some routine business pending a report expected from the rules committee for the disposition of the contested election of O'Neil vs. Joy and English vs. Hilborn. Mr. Outhwaite (Dem. Ohio), from the committee on rules, reported a rule limiting debate to two hours each on the two election cases, the final vote to be then taken. Mr. Outhwaite demanded the previous question on the adoption of the rule. The vote on ordering the previous question resulted 164 to 0.

Mr. Reed made the point of no quorum. The vote resulted 179 ayes to 1 nay, one more than a quorum. The speaker voted in the affirmative. The result was greeted with applause. This is the first time for a week that the Democrats have mustered a quorum.

The vote on the adoption of the special rule was 172 to 7, including the vote of the speaker, and it was agreed to, a bare quorum voting.

The vote then recurred on the substitute for the report of the majority of the committee presented by the minority declaring Mr. Joy entitled to his seat. The vote resulted: Yeas, 102; nays, 146. The substitute was rejected.

Mr. Burrows (Rep. Mich.) moved to reconsider, and Mr. Springer (Dem. Ill.) moved to lay that motion on the table. The Republicans then precipitated another filibuster by making the point of no quorum on the division, and the roll call was taken, the Republicans refraining from voting. The vote resulted: Yeas, 137; nays, 8. The house then adjourned.

Washington, March 30.—There was a wild scene in the house to-day. The Republicans continued to filibuster against the seating of Mr. O'Neil, and Mr. Reed and Speaker Crisp made speeches which stirred up a partisan feeling. A motion was made for the arrest of absentees. Speaker Crisp refused to entertain a motion for an appeal and declined emphatically to state the grounds of his refusal. Mr. Payne moved to adjourn and the speaker declined to entertain this motion also. By this time the members of both sides were wildly excited. Partisan blood was at fever heat, and for several minutes pandemonium reigned. From all parts of the floor members were shouting their defiances and several personal collisions were narrowly averted.

"Shut up," yelled some one across the floor while the speaker banged his gavel and ordered all members to be seated. The speaker was evidently determined to crush the filibustering tactics of the minority.

"I rise to a question of order," shouted Mr. Payne.

"And the chair refuses to recognize the gentleman for that purpose," returned the speaker.

"The question is on the adoption of the resolution instructing the sergeant-at-arms to arrest absentees. As many as favor it will say aye, contrary no."

In the midst of the chorus of voices that followed Messrs. Payne, Boutelle, and Reed were on their feet clamoring for recognition. The speaker refused to recognize them.

"Tellers," shouted Mr. Payne. Pending that motion he moved to adjourn.

The speaker declined to entertain the motion. Mr. Reed loudly insisted on his right to know why, but the speaker replied by ordering him to take his seat.

The speaker appointed Messrs. Patterson and Payne tellers, but Mr. Payne declined to serve, as did also Mr. Reed, when the speaker said that Mr. Patterson would serve alone. The excitement was then intense.

"A band of ruffians has possession of this house," shouted Mr. Boutelle.

"We are giving you some of your own medicine," retorted Mr. Outhwaite.

When a sufficient number had been counted by Mr. Patterson to order the ayes and nays, the announcement was made. In a chorus the Republicans were protesting against this irregularity, and Mr. Reed in a loud voice declared that the chair knew the rules required two tellers.

"The chair takes all the consequences," replied the speaker emphatically, amid a whirlwind of Democratic cheers. Things were now going with a high hand. The scene reminded the old members of the Fifty-first congress. Finally quiet was restored and a motion to adjourn was carried.

Senator Washburn introduced the Altamont Water company bill allowing them to dam the St. Louis river on the Fond du Lac Indian reservation.

Washington, April 2. — The tariff bill was taken up in the senate to-day and will occupy the attention of the senate the greater portion of the time indefinitely. Senator Hansbrough's thistle bill will probably be quietly laid aside until the tariff bill is passed. The new Chinese treaty and the Bering sea arrangement will probably be considered during the week. Several amendments to the tariff bill will be offered by the committee on finance, after which the speaking will begin in which Senator Voorhees, as chairman of the finance committee, will lead off. He will be replied to by Senator Allison, but beyond these speeches it is not known in what order senators will be heard. It is quite likely that Senators McPherson and Hill, on the Democratic side, will speak early in the week, and it is known that on the Republican side of the chamber Senators Hale, Lodge, Cullom, Hoar, Hawley, Morrill and Mitchell (Or.) are prepared to speak.

The struggle over the O'Neil-Joy contested election case was resumed in the house. Although it has been apparent since this case has been up at least a dozen Democrats were opposed to seating the Democratic contestant, the partisan feeling during the last three days of the filibuster has served to drive those who were lukewarm into camp, and while they will probably not vote for O'Neil they will at least lend their votes and presence to make the necessary quorum to seat the St. Louis Democrat. The English-Hilborn case will follow, and so far as known, the Democrats are united on the proposition to seat English, the contestant.

RIOT IN MILWAUKEE.

A Large Number of Men Injured, One Fatally.

Milwaukee, April 2.—A gang of toughs at St. Vincent school last night, while a Columbian league meeting was being held, attacked several persons with weapons. In the fight Frank Phillips was cut in the shoulder and back. He was removed to his home in the patrol wagon. His injuries are thought to be quite serious. There were two others hurt, but not seriously. The seven men arrested are all Polish Catholics. There were many wild rumors during the evening that a concerted attack had been made by members of the A. P. A. upon the Catholics.

The meeting at which the stabbing occurred was called for the purpose of endorsing the Democratic city ticket, which is being supported by the Columbian league in the present election. The rioters were Catholics, but non-members of the league, and were evidently present for the purpose of breaking up the meeting. The fight began in the corridor of the hall, and was carried into the interior, the attacking force using knives and axes in their fight. It is understood that the rioters were members of the co-operative party, although when the news of the trouble first reached the down town police station the story was spread that they were members of the A. P. A. Frank Phillips, one of the men who were wounded, will die.

About twenty or thirty Poles were more or less injured during the affray. It is not thought, however, that any one but the one named is in any danger.

THE HAWAIIAN POLICY.

Minister Willis Says It Is Now in the Hands of Congress.

Honolulu, March, 23, per Steamer China, via San Francisco, April 2.—At the last meeting of councils the executive was asked whether Minister Willis was still carrying out his plan of intervention for the purpose of restoring the queen. It was wished to let the natives understand just how the matter of restoration stood. In reply President Dole read the following communication from the minister:

"Legation of the United States, Honolulu, Feb. 14, 1894.—Hon. S. B. Dole, Minister of Foreign Affairs: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of this date, in answer to my letter of the 19th ult., and inform you that on the 20th I was notified by my government that the Hawaiian question had been referred to congress and that my special instructions had been fully complied with. With assurances of high esteem, I am, sir, very respectfully,

—"Albert S. Willis."

The president said the expression "my special instructions have been complied with" seemed to answer the question asked.

FLED WITH A GIRL.

A Well Connected Young Man in Trouble.

Chicago, April 2.—Samuel Dyatt, formerly manager of the shoe house of Bora, Crawford & Co. of Washington, D. C., who is wanted by the Washington police, was arrested in this city last night. He is charged by the Washington firm with embezzlement, and will be taken back to the capital for trial. Dyatt left Washington last Saturday night in company with Miss May Clipper, a beautiful young woman about twenty years of age, the daughter of William Clipper, a wealthy and retired real estate man of that city. Dyatt is charged with embezzling $400 from the Crawford company. It is said in Washington that Dyatt secured a marriage license and married Miss Clipper, and added bigamy to embezzlement, as he is said to have a wife and family in Baltimore, but the prisoner denies this charge.

Breach of Promise Case.

San Francisco, April 2.—Mrs. Mary Antonio Castro Majors, a member of a well known California Spanish family, to-day began suit for breach of promise in the United States circuit court against Harry S. Cowell, son of the well known Santa Cruz millionaire lime king, Harry C. Cowell. The woman wants $50,000, and will contest for a share of his wealth which she declares belongs to their child. Mrs. Majors is the widow of Robert Majors, a very well known citizen of Santa Cruz, who was fatally shot five years ago. It was during Majors' illness, she says, that Crowell began to come to her house, and after her husband's death, paid her marked attention, lasting through several years. Mrs. Majors is the mother of eight children, seven by Majors and one alleged to be by Cowell.

Coke Workers Will Strike.

Uniontown, Pa., April 2.—Reports from all the mass meetings in the coke region to-day have been received at the headquarters here. An immense meeting was held at Leisenring. The Frick men who have been counted on to come out are divided. There is to be a convention of workers at Scottdale to-morrow and the Frick men will wait to see what the outcome may be. This convention will be made up of delegates from the Leisenring district, chiefly Frick employes. The arrangements as officially vouched for to-night are that at sunrise to-morrow will see the closing down of at least thirty of the biggest plants in the region, and the waging of another bitter fight between capital and labor.

Comes From Pitcairn Island.

San Francisco, April 2.—President McCoy, ruler of the famous little community on Pitcairn island, has arrived here to engage two school teachers to educate the children on the island. The community now has 128 people and has recently adopted a new form of government, over which he presides as president. He is assisted by a council of six men.

Found a Bomb in London.

London, April 2.—A bomb with a burning fuse attached to it, was found today at the entrance of the Three Tuns hotel, Blackheath, near this city. The police are investigating the matter.

St. Paul Election.

St. Paul, April 2. — Dr. Charles A. Wheaton has consented to become the Republican candidate for mayor. When the announcement was made Robert A. Smith announced his withdrawal as the Democratic candidate. O. O. Cullen is in the field as the independent Democratic candidate.

W. H. Clark a Pension Examiner.

Washington, April 2.—Commissioner Lochren to-day appointed W. H. Clark as a member of the board of pension examining surgeons at Worthington, Minn.

BREVITIES.

It seems to snow very easy this spring.

S. M. Hoff is doing business at Crookston this week,

J. A. Dainard went down to Crookston to-day on business.

We learn that there will be a dance in Bjerk's hall next Saturday night.

C. G. Rapp made a business trip to Crookston the first of the week.

S. M. Dainard went down to St. Paul last Monday with a car of stock.

Jake Thill, the Wylie wheat buyer, was doing business in town yesterday.

Mayor Meehan of Thief River Falls, was in town a short time last Monday.

The prospect for an early spring is not nearly so good as it was a month ago.

R. J Montague the Crookston attorney, was doing business in town last Friday.

J. N. Stranahan returned last Friday from Stephen where he had been for a week past.

About six inches of snow fell yesterday, much of it melting as it fell but we still have snow to spare,

J. D. Marshall, the Red Lake Falls miller, was looking over his business interests here last Friday,

Prof, Wishard came up from Crookston last Monday. He will commence the spring term of school on April 16th.

E. C. Robinson, agent of the Great Northern at Thief River Falls with his wife drove down today to take the train from here.

People returning from the Rain Lake gold fields report things in bad shape there and that it is a good place to keep away from until spring opens.

E, H, Stranahan left today for West Superior where he goes to see the Billings Hardware Co. He has had an offer from that firm to go on the road and if satisfactory terms are arranged he will soon start at work.

Rapp & Post have been busy the past week moving into their new store, and have about finished the job. They now have a store which any town might be proud of and reflects favorably on their business enterprise.

Christ. Bjofk returned today from Edmonton, N. W. Territory, where he had been looking over the country. He has a very poor opinion of that region and says that the land is poor work is scarce and all kinds of provisions very high.

Cleveland has vetoed the Bland Seigniorage bill, and Wall Street is safe We must have "sound money" says Cleveland, meanwhile millions are starving because money is so sound that they cannot get enough to live on. Cleveland is making himself the most collossal mistake of the century. Can we stand three years more? It is an open question.

THE TIMES OUT OF JOINT.
Found Floating.

Sing a song of nickles, pockets full of trash, over head and ears in debt, out of ready cash. Heaps of flying collectors, busy as can be, ain't we had a busy time in 1893? Grover in the White House playing with the kids, Carlisle in the treasury cancelling silver bids. Congress trying all they can to make us still more poor, ain't we got a bright outlook for 1894?

If the Republican tariff was really and truly a robbery of the people what shall be said of the Democratic tariff? The duties paid under the McKinley bill during the last fiscal year aggregated $193,373,452, or not quite $3 per capita of the population of the United States. Under the Wilson bill, as amended in the senate, the duties, according to Democratic estimates will amount to $163,903,771, a reduction of $32,469,681. So that the Democratic tariff will continue to rob the people to the extent of five-sixths of the plunder stolen from them under the McKinley bill.—Pioneer Press.

Seattle Wash., March 29.—Through the investigation of the chamber of commerce to whom the Great Northern car cleaners made an appeal in the matter of wages, it is learned that Mr. Hill's great road pays the lowest wages of any railroad on the coast for like service except the Canadian Pacific, which employs Chinese at 90 cents a day, or 10 cents less than Mr. Hill pays white men for from 12 to 18 hours work. The Great Northern docks the men if the trains are delayed by washouts, which is usually the case. This month some of the cleaners only get in six or seven days owing to the washouts which kept the trains delayed for a week. The feeling among the men is very bitter toward the road.—Minneapolis Journal.

Crookston held their city election yesterday. Full reports are not at hand. John Cromb, the Republican candidate for mayor was elected by about fifty plurality. All of the Republican ticket was elected by small pluralities except assessor, Major Mix Democrat, being elected. The Peoples party was not successful but they did splendid work recording over 250 votes for the reform party. This is a net gain of over 100 votes and clearly shows that the party is steadily gaining ground.

Considerably over 1,000,000 dozen decayed and pungent eggs reach New York city every year. What becomes of them? If you ask an egg man he will say that he does not know, but that nothing is wasted. That is true. All the bad eggs are sold. Some of them go to the tanneries to help put an extra polish on leather. A larger number of them are sold to the great coffee roasting establishments. There the odeiferous contents are to put an oily gloss on the roasted coffee bean. Thus eventually the egg that is cast out by the jobber finds its way to the stomache of the consumer. Probably the unsuspecting consumer, judging by its looks, congratulates himself on getting a pound of coffee of extra strength and richness of aroma and flavor. Probably he has. —Ex.

J. L. Johnson
Recorder.

It is painful to say it but it must be said nevertheless; The present mild weather, conducive as it is to good crops, and promising as it is of an early spring and its abundant opportunities for farm work and production, is not accompanied with the usual exultation of the people. The assurance and hope that such prospects give have heretofore thrilled the nation with joy from center to circumference: but now they are parents of misgivings, fears, a dread as of some strange impending doom. Business is stagnate, bankruptcy rampant, factories closed, railroads almost trainless thousands starving and other thousands on the verge of starvation. Under such conditions the smiles of a bountiful providence that we are now enjoying should make rejoicing universal joy unconfined, and hope dance merrily in every human breast. Under ordinary conditions the prospect of bountiful crops would be a golden promise, indeed; it would imply revived business, financial solidity, busy factories, burdened railroads, satisfied appetites and general prosperity. But alas! existing conditions are not produced by their usual cause; scarcity is not their parent, but abundence is his name! Our people are not idle, are not starving because this fair land has been desolated by war, pestilence or famine but because it has been cursed by abundance! In the face of such a peculiar condition is it strange that the husbandman is not joyfully thrilled by warm suns and genial winds in the ides of March, or that he sows seeds with doubt and misgiving even though season and weather are kind and hope-inspiring? Is it strange that languishing trade and starving multitudes refuse to be reassured and comforted by the promise of greater abundance? The country is full of want, misery and poverty, and full to overflowing with everything that constitutes real wealth, the material foundation of the nation. Is it any wonder then that more real wealth is regarded a doubtful panacea for the prevailing poverty? It is no wonder, hence the indifferance of the people to the present smiles of the farmers' God.

But, farmers, sow, plant, rear flocks, and herds, and at the same time resolve to burst the bonds that monopoly of all kinds have woven about you, especially that money monopoly and manipulation that are responsible for the present anamolous conditions, and you will be well rewarded for your labor. This may be "politics" that many men heartily dispise an agricultural paper for meddling with but it is the politics of the home of wife and children, of manhood, of prosperity, of humanity! And the paper that does not meddle with such politics in times like these should be denied admission to every home.—Farm Stock & Home.

I have been troubled for several years with scrofula, caused by impure blood, but could get no relief until lately. Our druggist recommended Beggs' Blood Purifier and Blood maker so highly that I decided to try it and have up to the present time, used five bottles and find it to be all that it is recommended. —Orrin Stone, Otsego Wis,—For sale by J. L. Johnson, Druggist.

I have recommended Beggs' Blood Purifier and Cherry Cough Syrup several times and must say that I have been surprised and more than pleased at results following use of same. I am not in habit of endorsing patent medicines, but can say truthfully, Beggs' medicines are all that is claimed for them.—Tesah Jones, M. D., Wintersville, Mo.—For sale by J. L. Johnson Druggest.

My wife had the worst case of Dandruff I ever saw and had tried three or four other remedies, and two bottles of Beggs' Hair Renewer proved all claimed for it.—E. P. Dunagan, Gainsville, Ga.—For sale by J. L. Johnson, Druggist.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of five hundred and forty-seven dollars which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John F. MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifteen and [illegible] dollars the interest which became due on the first day of December A. D. 1893, which is claimed to be due and is due and unpaid at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John A. Lindbeck and Hendrieka [illegible] Lindbeck his wife, mortgagors, to J. E. Luce, mortgagee, bearing date the first day of June A. D. 1892 and duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on [illegible] A. D. 1892, at [illegible] o'clock [illegible] in book [illegible] of mortgages on page [illegible] thereof, which said mortgage was executed to secure the payment of [illegible] three hundred and fifty dollars, due June 1st 1897, with interest [illegible] and [illegible] said mortgagee [illegible] default in the payment of said interest has elected and hereby elects to use the option as provided in said mortgage and he hereby declares the whole sum of money which is secured by said mortgage is now due and payable and there is claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice upon said mortgage the sum of three hundred seventy-three and 75-100 dollars principal and interest; and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed and the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage viz:

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

A Much Sought-After Contributor.

"It used to be," remarked a successful business man with some literary taste and learning, "that I wrote imaginative articles for the leading magazines of the country."

"When you were young, I suppose?" commented his companion.

"Yes, much younger than I am now."

"Were they accepted?"

"Never; but I presume with age and larger experience and riper knowledge one's style and matter improves, and the work he does is far more meritorious."

His companion showed an interest not before observable.

"You don't mean," he asked, "that you send anything to them now that is acceptable?"

"Oh, yes," he replied, promptly; "there isn't a magazine in the country that isn't glad to print my articles now, and some of them even solicit them. I have something in some of them every month."

"I have never noticed," more surprised than ever. "Are they signed?"

"Yes; by the firm's name. You will find them in the advertising pages."

How Finger-Nails Grow.

The average time taken for each finger nail to grow its full length is about four and one-half months, and at this rate a man of seventy years would have renewed his nail 187 times. Taking the length of each nail at half an inch, he would have grown 7 feet 9 inches of nail on each finger, and on all his fingers and thumbs an aggregate length of 77 feet 5 inches.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers, and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

Told by a Florida Fisherman.

"It is well worth a trip to the North Carolina coast," said Col. Keogh, of that state, "to see the operations of one of the big seines in the water along Albermarle or Pimlico Sound. And what enormous takes are frequently made—barrelfuls of herring at a single haul!"

"Abundant as the finny tribe is in the North Carolina waters," said Col. Walter B. Evans, of Florida, who had been listening to Col. Keogh, "it is not until you get down into my country that you will find fish in multitudinous quantities, so to speak. In the Indian river, particularly, they are far too thick for the comfort of the fisherman, and often embarrass him by their redundancy. I shall never forget one experience I had down there. It was a dark night and a party of us were on the river in a good sized sloop after big fish. We had not been long anchored when the light in our boat began to attract schools of mullet, and into that craft they jumped by the hundreds. Yes, thousands. Well, we stood it for awhile, till the burden got too heavy, and we felt the boat beginning to sink. Then, hurriedly blowing out the lights and pulling anchor we made for the shore. I am positive if we had let those fish keep piling into us they would have carried all hands down to a watery grave. As it was we made a narrow escape."—Washington Post.

Crazy on the Subject of Dress.

A paper published in London gives a strange account of the Duchess of Somerset, whose personal property, it says, was sold at auction a few days ago. It seems the poor lady had a mania for clothes. She had at the time of her death not only 1,000 pairs of gloves, but 600 pairs of silk stockings, 500 lace handkerchiefs, and all sorts of dresses, many of them of the fashion of forty years ago. She had been confined to her own house for nearly thirty years, yet she regularly ordered her elegant court dresses with each change of season, precisely as she would have done had she been in society, as she used to be. Moreover, she used often to dress herself in her elegant finery and parade up and down her room as though she were at a reception. The writer of this article does not appear to consider her insane, only eccentric. If the story be true one cannot help wondering whether the poor woman, when she had youth and health, gave herself so utterly to the love of dress and display that she could not fill her thoughts with any other subject.—The Pansy.

THE POLLARD CASE.

THE SENSATIONAL SUIT AGAINST BRECKINRIDGE.

Miss Pollard Takes the Stand and Relates the Story of Her Shame—She Testifies That Breckinridge Held Illicit Relations With Her After His Marriage.

Washington, March 28.—Attorney Butterworth, of Col. Breckinridge's counsel, kept the circuit court waiting for a quarter of an hour and then failed to appear at the first session of the court to-day. Finally the defense called to the witness stand the chief of police, Maj. Moore, in whose office there had been two promises made by Col. Breckinridge to marry Miss Pollard, on May 13 and 17, 1893. It was proposed to contradict some of Miss Pollard's statements regarding these interviews. Maj. Moore denied that in either of the two interviews Col. Breckinridge had said: "This is one of life's tragedies," or that he had said anything about Miss Pollard bearing two children or being pregnant. In neither interview had Col. Breckinridge said: "She knew I was a married man when she took me," nor had Miss Pollard said: "Yes, I gave myself to him."

Answering further questions, the major said that he had only made notes of what impressed his mind after the interview was concluded; that Miss Pollard and Col. Breckinridge had talked all the time. Miss Pollard seemed excited and doing most of the talking, while Col. Breckinridge seemed cool. He would not pretend that he recalled everything. Much had been said which he could not remember, as that part of the conversation he had recorded in his notes would not have occupied more than half a minute. His attention had been called to the conversation, but not for three months afterward.

The second interview, it was developed under cross-examination, had lasted nearly an hour, and had been less excited than the first, Miss Pollard doing most of the talking.

"This was the interview of the 17th of May, when Miss Pollard narrated that she lay on the sofa. Col. Breckinridge sat beside her, and afterward he took her hand in his and your hand and promised to marry her?" repeated Judge Wilson, aiming to emphasize an old score.

"Yes sir."

Then when Judge Wilson asked if anything had been said or done in that interview to indicate that the promise of marriage was merely a scheme between the two parties, not made in good faith, the defense was strenuous in its objections, protesting that it called for an opinion which should be the province of the jury, not of a witness. Judge Bradley admitted it, however, and the major said nothing had been done of the sort to indicate a scheme such as has been described.

Experts then testified that letters which Miss Pollard denied writing were written by the same person who wrote the ones she said were hers.

Washington, March 29.—The surprise of the Pollard-Breckinridge trial to-day was the unexpected appearance of one of Miss Pollard's old lovers, Rankin Rossell, a Kentucky schoolmaster. His deposition had been read in the case, but to make his testimony doubly sure the ex-fiancee was introduced in person, and no sooner had he taken the stand than Madeline Pollard glided in, for the first time this week from the office of her attorney across the street, where she waits to be sent for when her presence is desirable. Probably she will be in court to-morrow to face her silver-haired accuser, for the attorneys declare that there will be positively no longer postponement of the testimony of the principal in the case, and that Col. Breckinridge will take the stand without fail during the day. Rossell testified that Miss Pollard hugged and kissed him so much that he got tired of it. He did not want to marry a woman who acted as she did.

The deposition of Hiram Kaufman, a Lexington butcher, was taken up after the cross-examination of Rossell had been concluded. Kaufman alleged that he had met Miss Pollard in an assignation house, he having gone there with Rhodes, the latter having introduced him to Miss Pollard. The deposition also ascribed objectionable language and actions to the plaintiff.

The deposition of John A. Brandt, a school janitor of Lexington, followed. He testified to the same things as Kaufman.

The case of the defense is drawing to a close with the appearance of Col. Breckinridge, whose testimony is expected to occupy at least three days—as long a time as Miss Pollard was on the stand. Then there will be rebuttal for an indefinite period, as Miss Pollard will take the stand again, and witnesses have been summoned from Kentucky.

Washington, March 30.—Col. Breckinridge was placed on the witness stand today to testify in his own behalf. Miss Pollard was present. The defendant told of the first meeting with Miss Pollard, when she accosted him on a train and asked him to call on her at the seminary. The letter which Miss Pollard says she did not write was submitted in evidence after a long argument. Resuming, Col. Breckinridge told of Miss Pollard asking him to take her to an entertainment in a carriage. He consented.

"After we were driven some distance," he said, "and she was talking at some length about her desire to go into journalism, to be an authoress, and we had spoken of George Eliot, she took off her hat and put it on the front seat. I put my arm around her. There was no protestations on my part. No offer of love. What occurred, occurred in a natural way. I was a man with passion. She was a woman with passion. That was all. There was no outcry by her, no resistance. I, man as I was, I took liberties with her person."

"Just a case of illicit love?" broke in Mr. Butterworth.

"That was it, Butterworth. I am a man, she a woman; human, both of us."

Continuing: "That was going out. Going back there was hardly a word spoken until we got close to the city. Under the gaslight I took out of my pocket a stamped envelope. She was on my left-hand side; I put my hand in my pocket and put something into the envelope. She refused to accept it. I said: 'There are a great many little things you need.'"

"What was in that envelope?" Mr. Butterworth inquired, but the congressman ignored the interruption, continuing: "As we got out I put it into her hand, closed her hand on it and bid her good night."

"What was it?" repeated Attorney Butterworth.

"It was a bill. I think a ten-dollar bill."

"Adjourn the court," shouted Judge Bradley, who had sat through the narrative with his head averted and eyes closed, and the court adjourned.

Washington, March 31.—There was an audience awaiting the second appearance of Col. Breckinridge on the witness stand whose interest in him and what he would have to say was more intense than that of any of the audiences he had ever faced before. Foremost in it sat the plaintiff and her elderly companion, Mrs. Ellis; back of them in double rows the lawyers in the case and also Desha Breckinridge, the son to whom the defendant had referred in affectionate terms while detailing the members of his family yesterday. Further beyond were two long rows of newspaper men and sketchers waiting to transfer to paper the different attitudes of the congressman witness, and then the ranks of spectators, most of them members of the bar. No time was lost in sending Col. Breckinridge to the stand. He began by testifying that he had often given and sent Miss Pollard money.

When Col. Breckinridge said Mr. Rhodes told him he had been intimate with Miss Pollard, the plaintiff burst out crying and said: "That is a lie. Why can't he tell the truth about some things?" She was reproved by the judge.

"The plaintiff has said that on two occasions, after protestations of love, you said you would marry her if it was possible," the lawyer queried.

"There is not a scintilla of truth in that statement—not a shred. Under no circumstances, at no time was there such a statement. The plaintiff never alluded to the possibility of it. Before the death of my wife there was not a solitary word that could be distorted into such a thing."

He related how he went to Mrs. Guess' assignation house and other places with the plaintiff, paid the bills and often gave Miss Pollard money. He continued:

"From November, 1885, to July, 1887, there were no improper relations between us, although I was supporting her. The entanglement really began when she came to Washington against my will. I frequently said to her as earnestly as I knew how, that the relations between us could only result in public scandal and perhaps destruction of us both; that her character, her lack of self-control, her temper, was such that some day there must come an exposure. I urged her to go anywhere, where she could study, offering to pay her expenses and saying the burden could be no greater on me than it was. Several times I thought she had agreed to go, once to Cambridge. Some of our interviews were more excessively unpleasant than any words can describe. She would come to me at the capitol at my committee room; declare that she was not going to leave; that she was going to have the support owing to her. I suppose at times, being excessively angry, I said things that were hard and bitter. I knew that the only alternative was submission or the destruction of the lives of those dependent on me, and let it go on, hoping that to-morrow would bring a solution of the problem."

Mr. Breckinridge related how the plaintiff had threatened to shoot him and herself. He finally consented to permitting Miss Pollard to tell Mrs. Blackburn that they were engaged, with the understanding that the marriage was never to take place. This, he said was done to prevent a scandal and to keep Miss Pollard from carrying out her threat of killing him. He admitted the secret marriage to Mrs. Wing, but denied that he promised, in the presence of Maj. Moore, to marry Miss Pollard.

Washington, April 2. — Congressman Breckinridge to-day continued the recital of his version of the nine years' intrigue with Madeline Pollard and he consumed the entire day in rounding out his story. He will soon pass into the hands of ex-Judge Jere M. Wilson for cross-examination. From this inquisition the followers of the trial are anticipating their choicest entertainment, for the jurist and ex-congressman from Indiana has a well earned reputation as the most trying man who could be selected from the local bar to take a witness. He is no respecter of persons in the court room, following faithfully the axiom that all men are equal in the eyes of the law, and he has an unusual facility at planning traps for a witness, leading him along different lines of inquiry, which seem harmless, considered singly, and then combining conclusions therefrom in one question which puts the victim on record in another light. Miss Pollard and her lawyers have busied themselves in taking notes throughout the colonel's testimony from which they expect to draw material for cross-examination. There will be but little testimony for the defense after Col. Breckinridge leaves the stand, and most of that will be in the form of depositions. The rebuttal for the plaintiff will come in when Miss Pollard herself will probably take the stand again and the old principal of the Weslyan college will be called to refute the testimony of Rankin Rossell, to whom Miss Pollard was engaged in 1884. Dr. Brown will testify that Rossell could not have called 16 see her two or three times a week as he said, because the rules of the school, which were strictly enforced, permitted visitors only Friday nights, and then in the presence of the teachers, and will deny that Miss Pollard prepared to go with him to Chicago, as she was only permitted to kiss him good by under the search light of a teacher's gaze. The trial will probably last two weeks longer.

Rebels in a Bad Way.

Buenos Ayres, April 2.—Advices have reached here from Brazil showing that the insurgent forces have abandoned Itarere and that the government forces have occupied that place. It is reported that dissensions have sprung up among the members of the provisional government at Desterro. The insurgent warships Republica and Aquidaban are said to be short of coal and their engines out of order.

A Disaster in the Coeur d'Alene Mountains.

Denver, Special.—A special to the News from Spokane, Wash., says: As a result of two great snow slides on Canyon creek, in the Coeur d'Alene mountains to-day three families, consisting altogether of from twelve to fourteen persons, are mangled and bruised beneath thousands of tons of snow, and any possibility of any of them being rescued alive, is out of the question. At an early hour a section of snow 300 feet in length, near the Black Bear mine, became detached and started down the steep mountainside at a terrible pace, and before the inhabitants of the cabins in the path of the slide could flee, the mighty avalanche was upon them. Trees were torn up by the roots; boulders carried along with mighty force, the whole shaking the earth as if an earthquake was coming. Two families whose names could not at this writing be learned, together with their houses, were caught and carried along with the slide and barried out of sight at the bottom of the canyon. Others unaccounted for are also believed to have been killed. A family named Chilson, consisting of father, mother and three children, heard the avalanche coming. Picking up the children, the frantic parents attempted to flee to a place of safety, but before they had got fifty yards they were overtaken by the resistless mass of snow and crushed to death.

To Perfect Health and Strength After Four Years' Suffering.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen—I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the grandest discovery yet made, and it fulfills even more than you claim for it. My wife has been sick for the past four years. For three years she was so bad that she was unable to do any of her housework. We had good physicians, but she did not recover her health. She was suffering from Bright's disease and

COXEY ON THE MARCH

THE ARMY BEGINS ITS JOURNEY TOWARD WASHINGTON.

Some of the Men Declare That Unless They Are Furnished Provisions They Will Raid Farm Houses—Many Tramps Join the Army.

Canton, Ohio, March 27.—Coxey's army, after remaining here for one night and almost until noon, again started on the march toward Washington. At 6 o'clock in the morning the camp was turned into a veritable Valley Forge. Small groups of men could be seen shivering in every limb, trying to obtain shelter from the freezing blasts which came from the west. Two-thirds of the men who had started with the army had taken lodgings in the city prison, but at an early hour they began to gather at the grounds to get their rations. Some difficulty was experienced in getting men who could use the cooking utensils to advantage, but finally at the east side of the tent gasoline stoves were set up and the morning meal commenced. The donation, which consisted of one dozen boiled hams, 200 loaves of bread, five bushels of potatoes, baked beans and an abundance of other eatables, were soon utilized, and everybody was thoroughly satisfied as far as the stomach was concerned. Fortunately, the abundance of supplies prevented the tramps from getting into any altercations over how the stuff should be divided, and for the first night out everything passed off harmoniously and the prospects seem flattering to the men, notwithstanding the cold weather. Many of the men were heard to grumble about Coxey taking lodgings at the best hotel in the city; and were of the opinion that he should take a dose of their own medicine. Several were interviewed at the city prison last evening as to what they intended to do in case provisions were not furnished en route, and each and every one of them said they would make a raid upon the farm houses. Stark Siding, one mile east of this city, a favorable rendezvous for tramps, added a new squad numbering about fifty to the army this morning.

Alliance, Ohio, March 28.—How Coxey's army survived the night at Louisville, seems a miracle. Herded together like penned-up cattle, 100 men spent the night in a room 30x40. The atmosphere could have been cut with a knife, and death might have been caused by asphyxiation. However, they were all on hand at 8 this morning. At that hour here and there could be seen groups wending their way to camp, ready for bugle call. Breakfast was under preparation, and three bushels of potatoes, some cold ham, bread and sausage was given out. All seemed to be satisfied. The army reached here in the afternoon and camped for the night.

Gen. Coxey went to Chicago to-day but he will be back to-morrow. He and Brown addressed a crowd in the opera house this afternoon. Brown's plausible defense of the crusade brought applause and $10.92. Coxey's departure has caused rumors that the expedition is about to collapse. Unless he is ruined financially some sort of a procession will certainly reach Washington.

Alliance, Ohio, March 29.—It was the intention of the leaders of the commonweal army to break camp about 8 o'clock to-day, but the start was delayed until nearly 9. The next camp will be established at Salem, which is distant thirteen miles. The itinerary plans were to arrive there at 2 o'clock, but the roads are very rough after the thaw of yesterday, and the severe freeze of last night will probably cause some delay in the march. The soldiers passed a comparatively comfortable night. Food is plenty thus far, and as long as the men have all they want to eat and fairly comfortable places in which to pass the night, there will be little incentive to rid the hen roosts, pig pens and sheep folds of the farmers. Before breaking camp Marshal Browne had a serious talk with his ragged band. Two of the men had a fight about midnight in the tent in a dispute over the ownership of a straw bed. "Unknown" Smith said to his command that if anything of this sort occurred again he expected to be in it with both fists. Owing to the gorging by the men, who have as many as four meals in succession by simply "coming again," meal tickets will be issued at Salem. Then the commonweal will be: One man, one meal. Marshal Browne has received a message from Columbia that the citizens of Leetonia will have a hot lunch on the line of march to-morrow.

Beaver Falls, Pa., April 2.—Several thousand people on foot, in vehicles and other ways met Coxey at Beaver Falls when the army entered in the afternoon. The crowd was curious, but not cordial. A delegation of mounted citizens met Coxey and escorted him and his followers through the town. Camp was then pitched near the Beaver river on College hill. Meetings were held on the ground at once and $26 collected by Marshal Smith. The army is now 270 strong. One hundred and twenty-five recruits joined to-day, necessitating the formation of a new commune, called the Cyclones. One hundred and eighteen of the recruits were potters from East Liverpool. Marshal Smith told his men that any one of them caught begging would be dismissed and prosecuted.

Only One Deduction Possible.

A member of a well known club in London lost his umbrella in the club and was resolved to draw attention to the circumstance. He caused the following notice to be put up in the entrance hall: "The nobleman who took away an umbrella not his own on such a date is requested to return it." The committee took umbrage to this statement and summoned the member who had composed it before them. "Why, sir," they said, "should you have supposed that a nobleman took your umbrella?" "Well," he replied, "the first article in the club rules says that 'This club is to be composed of noblemen and gentlemen,' and since the person who stole my umbrella could not have been a gentleman he must have been a nobleman."—San Francisco Argonaut.

1,110 BUS. POTATOES PER ACRE.
This astonishing yield was reported by Mr. Hahn of Wisconsin, but Salzer's potatoes always get there. The editor of the Rural New Yorker reports a yield of 736 bushels and 8 pounds per acre from one of Salzer's early potatoes. Above 1,110 bushels are from Salzer's new seedling, Hundredfold. His new early potato, Lightning Express, has a record of 600 bushels per acre. He offers potatoes as low as $2.50 a barrel, and the best potato planter in the world for but $2.
If you will cut this out and send it with 6c postage to the John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis., you will receive free his mammoth potato catalogue and a package of sixteen-day "Get There, Eli," radish.

After reading the following letters can any one longer doubt that a trustworthy remedy for that terribly fatal malady, consumption, has at last been found! If these letters had been written by your best known and most esteemed neighbors they could be no more worthy of your confidence than they now are, coming, as they do, from well known, intelligent and trustworthy citizens, who, in their several neighborhoods, enjoy the fullest confidence and respect of all who know them.

K. C. Melin, Esq., of Kempsville, Princess Anne Co., Va., whose portrait heads this article, writes: "When I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I was very low with a cough and at times spit up much blood. I was not able to do the least work, but most of the time was in bed. I was all run-down, very weak, my head was dizzy and I was extremely despondent. The first bottle I took did not seem to do me much good, but I had faith in it and continued using it until I had taken fifteen bottles and now I do not look nor feel like the same man I was one year ago. People are astonished and say, 'well, last year this time I would not have thought that you would be living now.' I can thankfully say I am entirely cured of a disease which, but for your wonderful 'Discovery,' would have resulted in my death."

Even when the predisposition to consumption is inherited, it may be cured, as verified by the following from a most truthful and much respected Canadian lady, Mrs. Thomas Vansicklin, of Brighton, Ont. She writes: "I have long felt it my duty to acknowledge to you what Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and his 'Pleasant Pellets' have done for me. They almost raised me from the grave. I had three brothers and one sister die of consumption and I was speedily following after them. I had severe cough, pain, copious expectoration and other alarming symptoms and my friends all thought I had but a few months to live. At that time I was persuaded to try the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and the first bottle acted like magic. Of course, I continued on with the medicine and as a result I gained rapidly in strength. My friends were astonished. When I commenced the use of your medicines, six years ago, I weighed but 100 pounds and was sinking rapidly. I now weigh 135, and my health continues perfect."

Mrs. Thos. Vansicklin

"Golden Medical Discovery" cures consumption (which is scrofula of the lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating and nutritive properties. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, shortness of breath, nasal catarrh, bronchitis, severe coughs, asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. While it promptly cures the severest coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood.

"Golden Medical Discovery" does not make fat people more corpulent, but for thin, pale, puny children, as well as for adults reduced in flesh, from any cause, it is the greatest flesh-builder known to medical science. Nasty cod liver oil and its "emulsions," are not to be compared with it in efficiency. It rapidly builds up the system, and increases the solid flesh and weight of those reduced below the usual standard of health by "wasting diseases."

To brace up the entire system after the grip, pneumonia, fevers, and other prostrating acute diseases; to build up needed flesh and strength, and to restore health and vigor when you feel "run-down" and "used-up" the best thing in the world is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It promotes all the bodily functions, rouses every organ into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, and through it cleanses, repairs, and invigorates the entire system.

A Treatise on Consumption, giving numerous testimonials with phototype, or half-tone, portraits of those cured, numerous references, also containing successful Home Treatment for chronic nasal catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, and kindred diseases, will be mailed by the World's Dispensary Medical Association of Buffalo, N. Y., on receipt of six cents in stamps, to pay postage. Or The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, 1,000 pages, 300 illustrations, mailed for $1.50.

A grizzly bear, said to be about 1,500 pounds in size, met George Stebbins on the American trail, near Ouray, last week. The bear was so astonished that it jumped the trail and fell over a bluff breaking its bones. Stebbins also died.

At one place on the Idaho side of the Snake river, across from Asotin county, Wash., and not covering a space of over fifty feet in extent, eight head of dead cattle were recently counted, having met death by tumbling from the bluffs above.

THE POLLARD CASE.

COL. BRECKINRIDGE IN THE HANDS OF THE PLAINTIFF'S ATTORNEY.

The Colonel Says That While There Were "Demonstrations" on the Part of Both He Said There Were No "Expressions" of Love.

Washington, April 3.—The usual crowd was present at the Pollard-Breckinridge trial to-day, and the colonel went over a great deal of the ground already covered.

"Did you," asked Mr. Butterworth, "have any sexual relations with the plaintiff after the 29th of April, 1893?"

That is the date on which the defendant was secretly married to Mrs. Wing.

Mr. Breckinridge—I did not after the 29th of April, 1893. I did not have any sexual relations with the plaintiff whatever. It is absolutely false. I never had sexual intercourse with the plaintiff after I returned to Washington after the 31st day of March, at any time or at any place. I returned on the 31st of March and had the conversation with Mrs. Blackburn. Plaintiff and I had no sexual relations on that day or ever after that day. The arrangements were made prior to my going to Mrs. Blackburn's, as the only reason I would go to Mrs. Blackburn's was that our relations should terminate; that she should leave the city of Washington, and that the relations between herself and Mrs. Blackburn should be allowed to die out gradually and I should support her until she should find some honorable vocation.

Judge Jere M. Wilson took Col. Breckinridge in hand for cross-examination after recess. The first questions were directed toward eliciting from the defendant admissions that in his early law practice friends had been obliged to make good sums of money improperly appropriated from clients. Col. Breckinridge was obliged to explain his connection with the Presbyterian church, which had been passive, rather than active. He had lived in Lexington within four squares of the house occupied by Sarah Guess, and had known the character of the place for twenty years. He also admitted that he had visited the house before he went there with Miss Pollard.

In telling that Miss Pollard had said that she had given Rhodes a higher proof of her intention of marrying him, he said he would advise a woman who had had sexual intercourse with a man to marry him, but with a man it was different, for the knowledge of it by the public would destroy the woman and only injure the man. Society looked upon these things differently. The colonel told of the first carriage ride, when their illicit relations began, and said that he had no excuse to offer for his actions. He could not justify it, but he declared it was not seduction, as Miss Pollard did not come to him a virgin.

Having secured the statement that he had written no letters to Madeline Pollard in 1886, Mr. Wilson sprung something very like a trap by dropping into a line of questioning which indicates that he has in reserve testimony to show that the member from Kentucky directed underground letters through a typewriter at the capitol. Then for the first time the defendant seemed to lose his temper and made most strenuous denials. The typewriter whose testimony is next in order, is a Miss Louise Lowell, now a clerk in the treasury department.

Washington, April 4.—Interest in the Pollard-Breckinridge case was intensified to-day by the presence of two ladies in the court room whose faces had not been seen before, sitting at the table with the Pollard forces, and from the passage which had closed the examination of the day before it was surmised that one of them must be Louise Lowell, the stenographer and typewriter who had a desk in the capitol in 1886, and to whom letters were dictated by Col. Breckinridge, if the claim of the plaintiff be true. Mrs. Lowell is at present a clerk in the treasury department, and is a woman of short stature with hair beginning to turn gray.

Mrs. Lowell took a seat in the witness box. She said that she had known Col. Breckinridge since February, 1886, having become acquainted with him at the house of representatives, where she had an office to carry on business as a stenographer and typewriter in the corridor by the committee on postoffices.

"Did you do work for Col. Breckinridge?" Mr. Wilson asked.

"I did."

"Did he bring manuscript of a letter to you?"

"He did, and I copied it in typewriter."

From 1886 to 1890 she had copied manuscript, addressed envelopes and done Col. Breckinridge's private correspondence and congressional work, always returning the manuscript.

"Now, what was on these envelopes?" continued Mr. Wilson.

"Miss Pollard, 76 Upper street, Lexington, Ky."

"And how do you remember that?"

"I kept a memorandum book in which I noted the address."

"Have you the book?"

"I have," she said, and the book was passed around for inspection of the lawyers.

"Feeling sure that sooner or later I would hear more of Miss Pollard, and not wishing to trust my memory I made that memorandum," she explained, and, continuing, said: "He (Breckinridge) brought me two or three envelopes separately, then a package of a dozen small ones, yellow with age, and not such envelopes as a business man would use."

The first communication, said the witness, was addressed to "My Dear Sister Louise," and when Mr. Wilson urged that testimony of its contents should be admitted Mr. Butterworth retorted that there was no proof that it had ever been mailed or received, reminding Mr. Wilson that it was the ground taken by him regarding the alleged forged letters of Miss Pollard's.

"I now give you notice if you have that letter to produce it," said Mr. Wilson to the defense.

"How can I produce the letter if I sent it to the plaintiff?" Col. Breckinridge said in reply, whereupon Mr. Wilson remarked in his inimitable way: "You and I will have a little conversation after a while."

Mrs. Lowell said she had not volunteered her evidence; did not know how the lawyers learned the facts.

Col. Breckinridge was recalled and gave emphatic denial to the previous witness' statements that he had carried to her the manuscript addressed to "My Dear Sister Louise." Mrs. Lowell had done typewriting for him. He would not swear he had never given her manuscript letters to copy.

Miss Pollard again took the stand and testified that she had received the letters said to have been directed by the typewritist. During her brief appearance the lawyers had their hands full endeavoring to make her confine herself to answering the questions directed to her.

Washington, April 5.—At the opening of the Pollard-Breckinridge trial to-day, referring to the colonel's statement that he had made no protestations of love to Miss Pollard on the occasion of that momentous carriage ride, when seduction is alleged to have occurred, Mr. Wilson asked him when he first began to talk to her affectionately.

"I never did make protestations of love. I talked to her kindly, encouragingly, when she was depressed; endeavored to get her to do something to make a place in the world for herself. I spoke solicitously to her, particularly when I first learned that she was pregnant by me, having interest in her which a man might for a young unmarried woman who had such circumstances in her life, for which he felt that he was in a measure responsible, since their lives had become interwoven."

"There were no expression of affection?"

"There were expressions of affectionate interest, but not such as could be construed into an intimation that our relations could be on any different basis than they were."

"Then it was a result of business interest for her welfare?"

"Expressions of kindly interest."

"Were these expressions which might be understood by her to be expressions of love?"

Col. Breckinridge wished to draw the distinction carefully between expressions and demonstrations. He said there was nothing but perfect understanding on their part of their relations; that they went to houses of a certain character for a certain well understood purpose, and they stayed there such a time as their pleasures and necessities demanded.

"I took her in my arms and kissed her. There were all the accompaniments of such a relation, which was carried out not coldly or brutally."

"There were no expressions of love on her part?"

"I could not say that. She was at times very demonstrative; at times otherwise."

"Your relations were those of lust rather than love?"

"I would not say that, for we met often at times when physical intercourse was impossible. She was a young woman of colloquial talents, sprightly and interesting."

Again Mr. Wilson led the colonel to repeat the distinction he drew between the injury to the young man and the destruction of a young woman from illicit relations.

"And do you think," he asked, "that a man is under obligations to prevent the destruction of a young woman?"

"Most assuredly I do, and if he does not he should be punished. I have had my punishment and am trying to take it without complaint."

The colonel said that he never agreed to marry Miss Pollard and flatly contradicted Mrs. Blackburn's testimony.

The cross-examination was concluded and the colonel was turned over to his lawyers for re-direct examination. Before court adjourned the judge permitted the principals and witnesses to leave and then roasted the spectators for their morbid curiosity. He said they had been on trial for their decency and had been found guilty of indecent conduct. They reminded him of buzzards sitting on a fence waiting for a sick horse to die.

Washington, April 6.—Judge Bradley's admonitions of the night before had the effect of reducing the attendance at the circuit court to-day to the thinnest audience yet gathered, and some of the men present wore a sheepish air.

The defense made an unexpected move by calling Miss Pollard to the stand and questioning her about the birth of her second child, which she said was born at noon, on Feb. 3, 1888. "I only held it in my arms two hours, according to my promise to him," she began.

"Now, now, Miss Pollard," Mr. Butterworth began nervously, warning Miss Pollard with great solicitude to confine herself to answering his questions. Mr. Wilson also admonished her.

The child had been taken to the Protestant Foundling asylum, on Fourteenth street in Washington, where she had visited it with Dr. Mary Parsons once. She continued:

"I gave it a little German name. I pinned a note on its clothing so they could name it. I was reading Carlyle, and I named it from a character of his, Dietz Carlyle, a name as far as possible from that of Col. Breckinridge or my own."

The second time she saw the child was on the 3d of May at the undertaking establishment, before it was buried. When Mr. Butterworth asked how the funeral expenses had been paid, she said that Mrs. Parsons had looked after that, she supposed Col. Breckinridge paid them.

During the testimony of the matron of the asylum Miss Pollard wept profusely. A colored cook at a house frequented by Miss Pollard and the colonel testified that the colonel complimented her upon her cooking and wanted to engage her when he and Miss Pollard married. She said that the colonel called upon Miss Pollard after the date upon which he was secretly married to Mrs. Wing, and she saw him kiss her. Miss Pollard's cousins testified that she was in Pennsylvania in 1888, when a woman of the town said that she associated with Miss Pollard in Kentucky. The defense rested its case to-day.

MRS. MILLER'S CASE.

Verdict in the Bird Island Slander Suit.

Olivia, Minn., April 6.—The examination of L. M. Thompson of Bird Island, for libeling Mrs. E. Miller, of the same place, took place here yesterday afternoon before Justice Kirwan. The alleged libel lay in Thompson's showing a letter with Mrs. Miller's name signed to it to some man whose name is not revealed. In the letter acts of adultery are spoken of and other things. Thompson's defense was that he had received the letter from some detective in Minneapolis; that he believed it true and that he showed it only to officers of the church from which Mrs. Miller had recently been expelled, and from which expulsion she had taken an appeal. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty, and the justice fined Mr. Thompson $25.

WORK OF CONGRESS

RESUME OF PROSEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, April 4.—The struggle over the O'Neill-Joy contested election case occupied the time of the house to-day. Mr. Patterson (Tenn.) said there should be no adjournment until action was had. There were 193 Democratic members in the city, fourteen more than a quorum, and it was the plan to arrest absentees and bring them to the bar of the house. Mr. O'Neill was seated by a vote of 155 to 28.

The tariff bill came up in the senate after some business of minor importance had been transacted. Mr. Allison spoke in opposition to the bill. Mr. Vest submitted amendments, most of which are to correct oversights by the finance committee. Mr. Allen (Neb.) offered a free coinage bill as an amendment to the tariff bill. The Bering sea bill passed the senate. Senator Morgan said that this hour, perhaps, a similar measure was being passed by the British parliament.

Washington, April 5.—In the house today the Republicans continued filibustering to prevent the unseating of Hilborn of California, but the Democrats secured a quorum and Mr. Hilborn was unseated —170 to 13—and Mr. English (Dem.) was sworn in. Mr. Hall of Minnesota was among the thirteen Democrats and Populists who voted in the negative.

Mr. Bland called up the seigniorage bill returned by the president without his approval, and moved that it pass, the objections of the executive to the contrary notwithstanding. Mr. Bland stated that on Saturday he would demand the previous question. From all quarters of the Democratic side there seemed to be a general desire to avoid the conflict of opening debate and Mr. Bland's suggestion of three days' debate was met with a chorus of cries of "Vote, vote." Then followed one of the most remarkable scenes witnessed in the house in years. The Republicans were euchred out of their chance of seeing the dissensions in the Democratic ranks thoroughly aired. Mr. Tracy, who was standing in a side aisle, said that as far as the Democrats of the minority of the committee on free coinage, weights and measures, were concerned, they were willing to take a vote immediately.

Washington, April 6.—Senator Hansbrough succeeded early in to-day's session of the senate in getting his Russian thistle bill up for further consideration. As soon as the bill secured the right of way, Senator Mills took the floor and attacked the bill on constitutional grounds. Senator Kyle followed Mr. Mills, and the South Dakotan favored legislation to exterminate the Russian pest. He pointed out to the senate that many farms had been abandoned in South and North Dakota because of this pest. The farms, he said, paid their owners before the thistle came to destroy their crops. Senator Allen followed Mr. Kyle in favor of some legislation to exterminate the thistle. Senator George then secured the floor to oppose the bill. The debate between Senators George, Hansbrough, Allen and others was at times very lively. At 2 o'clock the Hansbrough bill had to give way to the tariff discussion.

The house passed a deficiency bill and began consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill.

Washington, April 7.—The policy of delay in the senate by the Republicans was made manifest to-day, although Senator Aldrich declared that there was no purpose on the Republican side of resorting to filibustering. The proceedings throughout the day were of a nature to remind a spectator of the extra session. The motion to adjourn made by Senator Aldrich, and his motion for an executive session, the call for a quorum and other proceedings of a like character, together with the fact that a roll call was demanded by one side or the other on all the motions of this character became a part of the record, but necessarily no official note was taken of the conferences on both sides of the chamber, and of other transactions of a character to show that the tariff contest has reached an acute stage. Senators Voorhees, Jones, Harris and McPherson, Democratic members of the finance committee, were in whispered conversation a considerable part of the afternoon after a close vote on Senator Hill's motion to adjourn, and the Republican leaders were on the qui vive to discover the import of the conference. They at last, whether through inference or information, concluded that the Democratic leaders were preparing a scheme for the reading of the tariff bill which was afterward proved to be correct, and this the Republicans resolved to antagonize. They don't want the bill read at length, for if this should be done it would afford opportunity for a parliamentary coup like that which occurred on the seigniorage bill. Whether the plans of the Democrats were correctly divined or not, the senate adjourned amid a confusion of fruitless efforts to obtain a quorum an hour and a half in advance of the usual time.

In the house Congressman Hall to-day secured unanimous consent for the consideration and then for the passage of his bill allowing the city of Hastings to construct a wagon bridge across the Mississippi river. The house then went into committee of the whole, Mr. Hatch in the chair, and the consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill was resumed.

Washington, April 3.—Senator Carey is much encouraged over the prospects of his bill for the cession on the part of the government of 1,000,000 acres to each of the arid land states and territories to be improved by irrigation. There has been such a general expression of opinion on the part of the members in favor of the bill that there is little doubt that it will be favorably reported soon by the committee on public lands. Mr. Carey is led to believe that the bill will receive the unanimous endorsement of the committee. Senators Dolph and Vilas, both of whom favor the bill, say it provides for an experiment in the right direction, and is one which, if it should be undertaken, may lead to a solution of the question of what is to be done to reclaim the arid lands.

Washington, April 9.—The house today resumed consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill. The only objection to the bill is the subsidy to the fast southern mail. A bill which it is claimed meets in a large part the objections stated by President Cleveland to the Bland bill was introduced by Representative Meyers (Dem., La.) It provides for the coinage of standard silver dollars and for the issue of new bonds in lieu thereof heretofore authorized. The bill repeals such portion of the resumption act of 1875 as authorized the issuance of 4, 4 1-2 and 5 per cent bonds. In lieu of these the secretary of the treasury is authorized to sell bonds of $20 and multiples thereof, payable in coin after five years, bearing interest not exceeding 3 per cent. Provision is made for using the proceeds of these bonds for settling outstanding bonds. The secretary of the treasury is also authorized to coin into standard dollars 42,660,245 fine ounces of silver bullion, and to issue silver certificates on this coin. National banks are given power to deposit silver certificates in the treasury and receive treasury certificates therefor.

The senate resumed consideration of the tariff bill. The plan of the Democrats is to occupy the entire time of the senate in discussing the bill until the time arrives for a vote, but it is thought the Republicans will oppose this.

DEATH TO A DOCTOR.

Stillwater Physician Drinks Poisoned Coffee at Danville, Ill.

Danville, Ohio, April 9.—Dr. James R. M. Gaskill of Stillwater, Minn., who was in this city for treatment for cancer, died yesterday from the effects of poisoning. He, together with seven other guests, were attacked immediately after eating supper at a hotel. The others recovered. The poisoning is attributed to the coffee, and the coroner's jury will investigate.

Dr. J. M. Guy made examinations of the stomach and intestines of Dr. Gaskill and found arsenic in large quantities. The doctor also secured some of the coffee grounds that were used for supper. The doctor's investigations clearly show that arsenic was placed in the coffee pots while the evening meal was being prepared. No arrests have been made. The local authorities seem to be making no effort to ascertain who the guilty person is. Everything is left to the coroner's jury.

Crushed to Death.

Chicago, April 9.—Frank Kennedy was crushed to death and Frederick Koenig perhaps fatally injured beneath an elevator in the Columbus Cloak company's store this morning. The men were making some repairs to the elevator. They had been at work half an hour when they were startled by seeing the elevator cable in motion. They looked up and saw the cage coming down upon them. Before they could move the cage had cut all means of escape. Both Kennedy and Koenig shouted for help and then both were crushed by the heavy cage which slowly settled down upon them. The men's cries were heard by other men in the building who ran to their rescue. The heavy elevator was quickly raised from the bodies of the unfortunate men. Kennedy was dead and Koenig unconscious. Koenig was terribly crushed about the head, shoulders and legs and is in a precarious condition. The attending physicians have hopes, however, of his recovery.

Big Strike in Prospect.

Chicago, April 9. — There is a strong probability that the employers of labor in the various building trades will declare a lock-out by next Wednesday and throw from 60,000 to 100,000 men out of employment. At a meeting of the executive committee of the building league, which is made up of contractors in all branches of the building trades, it was the unanimous sentiment that a lock-out had become a necessity for the reorganization of the building trade along lines which would enable the contractor to control his own business without interference from the labor leaders, who, it is claimed, have become too arogant in their demands of late.

Illegal Voting Charged.

Crookston, Minn., April 9.—At a meeting of the council Saturday night, as the work of the canvassing board reached the poll list from the Fifth ward, E. D. Childs gave notice of contest of the election of A. McGregor, who was elected alderman over Mr. Childs by two votes. He claimed that two illegal votes were cast, and he has already sworn out a warrant for the arrest of one of the alleged voters. The council will consider the question to-night. The affair promises to be an interesting one. All the water works questions were carried.

Coke Strikers Quiet.

Mount Pleasant, Pa., April 9.—Sheriff McCann has returned from a tour of inspection through the region from the Standard to the Donnelly works. He reports everything quiet, but as the unexpected often happens, he is prepared to meet any outbreak that may occur to-morrow. Should the threatened invasion of the strikers from Fayette county take place the sheriff has 200 well armed deputies in readiness, and thinks this force sufficient to preserve the peace in this county.

Counterfeiters Caught.

Milwaukee, April 9.—Collin McDonald, a Bay City, Mich., saloonkeeper, Frank Westbrook, alias Malcomb, and "Hi" Weed, an unknown, were arrested early this morning in the all night saloons of the West side. On their persons was found nearly $1,000 in photographed bank notes, all of the denomination of $20, except one "queer" $5 note. The $20 was an excellent photograph of a South Bend National bank bill numbered H 6,380,196.

His Papa Paid the Fine.

Janesville, Wis., April 9.—The heaviest fine that can be imposed by a judge of the municipal court was given Clarence W. Wixom of Fulton, amounting, with costs, to $2,074. Wixom is a member of one of the wealthiest families of the county, but engaged in robbing hen roosts, etc. He pleaded guilty to seven charges of larceny, and was fined $2,000 and costs, or three years and a half in jail. His father paid the fine.

Tillman Must Beware.

Washington, April 9.—Gov. Tillman's reported statements that news is not commerce and that the interstate commerce has nothing to do with it, has directed attention to a decision rendered by a majority of the supreme court in 1877, bearing indirectly on this subject. At that time Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion of the court, held "That since the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden it had never been doubted that commercial intercourse is an element of commerce which comes within the regulating power of congress."

COXEY ON THE MARCH.

The Army on Its March toward Washington.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 4.—The march of the commonweal to Allegheny, the first stage of the long journey to Washington, was begun at Sewickley at 9 o'clock. Not one of the weary fellows left camp last night, except twenty, who sought warmer quarters in the local lock-up. A special order was issued by Col. Browne after breakfast. The men are advised to behave during the next two days, as attempts will be made to lead them astray. When Jack Run was reached a halt was ordered for lunch, after which the column again took up the weary march to Allegheny. On the road to Allegheny the army was well received. All the schools were dismissed in the forenoon and the boys crowded out of town after the commonweal, cheering and singing. There were 189 men marching. As the road lay alongside the railway every passenger train that passed was cheered by the men and the passengers waived handkerchiefs in return. The whole progress is looked upon by the leaders as an ovation.

Pittsburg, April 6.—Coxey's army broke camp at Exposition Park, Allegheny, at 10:30 o'clock, and again took up the tramp to Washington. About 300 men were in line, many recruits having been received during the two days' stay in Pittsburg. The army will camp at Homestead to-night and will then march to McKeesport.

Denver, April 6.—A. C. Fish, president of the Pan-American Bimetallic league, proposes to call a silver convention to meet in Washington May 1, the day Coxey's army is scheduled to arrive there.

St. Louis, April 6.—At a meeting of the representatives of the railroads leading east it was to-day decided to refuse to transport Frye's band of Coxeyites eastward. In accordance with this decision the representative of "Gen." Frye was informed that his men would either have to pay fare or walk. Upon learning this decision the chief of police at East St. Louis, where the army is now in camp, directed Gen. Frye to take his men out of the city limits at once. The next move of the travelers has not been determined upon.

Oakland, Cal., April 7.—The city of Oakland has had many exciting events in its history, but nothing has occurred here to compare with the turmoil of unemployed workmen which left San Francisco Wednesday to join Coxey's army in its journey to Washington. All night long every man, woman and child in Oakland was on the streets, the riot alarm was sounded, the governor was asked to call out the national guards, extra police and deputy sheriffs were sworn in, and armed with rifles and preparations made for fighting of the bloodiest kind, because 640 unemployed desperate men refused to leave the city. Only a rash word or an unlucky shot was required to precipitate a conflict which would have resulted in the extinction of this branch of the industrial army, for the men who composed it were mostly unarmed, and could have made but a feeble resistance to the officers and citizens. But the word was not uttered, nor the shot fired, for the army, overcome by force, consented to move when it was seen that further resistance to the will of the citizens of Oakland was useless.

Washington, April 9.—The unceremonious manner in which the freight car load of forty unemployed from Cincinnati was taken in charge by the police last night is a foretaste of the reception which awaits Coxey's army. To-day the men will be brought into police court and a charge of vagrancy entered against them. The local law against vagrants applies to all men without visible means of support who are destitute, likely to become charges upon the city, who have no vocation or means of getting a livelihood or who solicit alms. The penalty is ninety days in the workhouse at hard labor, but it rests within the discretion of the judge to accept their promise to leave the city at once, or to accept $200 bonds as surety that they will not beg or become public charges. Capt. Primrose, the leader of the band, may find himself in more serious trouble than his followers. There is an old law on the statute books, passed in 1830 and has never been repealed, which makes it a offense to bring into the district of Columbia any destitute people who are likely to become public charges, with a penalty from $25 to $50 fine for each offense. The police authorities are considering the advisability of bringing a charge of violating this law against the leader, in which case his fines, with an alternative of the workhouse imprisonment, would amount to a very heavy punishment. The same charge may be brought against Gen. Coxey if disaster does not overtake the army of the commonweal before it completes its itinerary. Of course, the vagrancy act may be brought into application against his followers.

Brownsville, Pa., April 9.—This town, where the distinguished and lamented Blaine spent the greater portion of his boyhood days, welcomed the army of the commonweal of Christ fairly well. Great curiosity has been for weeks aroused over the proposed arrival. It was not until 7 o'clock that the bugle was heard sounding down the valley and the commonweal of Christ marched over the Bridgeport bridge and entered this city. Ten thousand weary watchers viewed the tramp of 294.

ROUTE NUMBER ONE.

The Most Feasible for Duluth-Mississippi Canal.

Washington, April 9. — The subcommittee on the Mississippi canal have practically decided to report in favor of Route No. 1 as the most feasible of the five routes considered. This is via Prairie river and Sandy lake. The only obstacle in the way is the question of whether the water supply on the east end of the divide is sufficient. The committee had a long session and decided to get the opinion of Gen. Casey, chief of engineers, as to the probable cost of the canal.

Found Two Bombs.

Liege, Belgium, April 9.—The police have been investigating an anarchist plot which was said to include an attempt to explode dynamite bombs in several of the public buildings of this city. They became aware of the identity of the plotters and shadowed their every movement. News reached police headquarters from one of the detectives detailed upon the case which led to a hasty search of the Kinkenpoix railroad station. Two large bombs, supposed to be loaded with high explosives were found. Attached to the bombs were fuses all ready to be lighted.

BREVITIES.

Traveling men were numerous in town today.

The village schools will commence next Monday.

J. A. Dainard was at Red Lake Falls yesterday on business.

George Ralph, of Crookston, was in town a short time today.

John Dainard, of Crookston, was visiting friends here last Monday,

E. W. Twing made a business trip to Crookston the first of the week.

Mrs. W. A. Arthur was at Crookston a couple of days the first of the week.

Dr. Grundy, of Thief River Falls, was here yesterday on professional business.

Peter Hall reports the arrival of a bouncing boy at his place on Monday.

Deputy Sheriff M. E. Losey was up from Crookston on business last Monday.

Frank Kratka, the Thief River Falls real estate man, was in town last Monday,

A small crowd enjoyed a pleasant dance last Saturday evening in Bjerk's hall.

Miss Josey Harris left today for Wadena where she will stay for several months.

The country roads are in very bad condition at present, in fact almost impassible.

S. M. Dainard left today for Fosston where he has a contract to dig an artesian well.

C. A. Chelin is steeping rather high over the arrival of a baby girl at his place last Sunday.

It looked a month ago as if we would have an early spring but now it promises to be later than usual.

Frankie Gravel and Willie Doubie, two little boys who sell groceries and dry goods, were in town today.

Rev. Hilman, of Crookston, will preach in the Norwegian Lutheran Church next Sunday evening at 7,30.

At the council meeting last Monday evening J. A. Dainard was appointed assessor and S. Harris street commissioner.

Harry Greenlee was in town today on his way to Crookston. He has been spending the winter on his claim east of Red Lake.

J. A. Dainard holds his head just a trifle higher than anyone in town today on account of the arrival of a fine baby boy at his place yesterday.

The late snow storms have left the ground very wet and it will be at least a couple of weeks before seeding can commence except on the sand ridges.

We had the banner snowstorm of the season last Sunday nearly a foot of snow falling. It seems to be very slow in going off and we still have more than enough.

Martin Williams came up from Wadena last Friday. He returned there today, taking his family with him. Mr. Williams has been one of our prominent citizens for the past ten years and his many friends regret to see him leave.

E. H. Stranahan returned last Friday from West Superior where he contracted to work for the Billings Hardware Co, He left for that place again today and will go to work at once. He has been assigned this territory and will make this town once in six weeks. Here's success, Elmer, to the new venture.

We understand that the new village council will make a change in their time of holding meeting. Now they are supposed to meet at 7 p. m. on the first Monday in every month, but henceforth they will only meet in the dark of the moon at midnight. Their proceedings will be posted on the roof of the jail and a heavy fine imposed on anyone going on the roof. They have voted to raise five hundred dollars by direct tax this year and with the saloon license money will make a nice sum for them to blow in. The council will go in for reform, and their first reform is to do their work in the dark and we may look for private snaps galore.

These business men remind one of the old man who crawled under the bed to escape the wrath of his worthy spouse, and in response to her command to come out, declared he would not as long as he "had the spirit of a man left in him." They need more money and know it, every one of them, but as long as their manhood holds out they are going to stay on their knees and pray for less money. Farmers and laboring men must make up their minds to fight this battle without help from the business element of the country: That element is more putty in the hands of the Plutes.—Star.

J. L. Johnson wishes to announce to announce that he has received a full line of wall paper which he will sell at hard time prices.

It is not gold that the single-standard men want; it is a basis for money which they control. Can anyone doubt for a minute that they would repudiate gold and accept silver if they were producers of the West or if gold was as plentiful as silver and silver as scarce as gold? Is there really a man in the United States with gall so large as to believe that the Wall street cry for "honest money" is honest? Or, for that matter, is there any one so unacquainted with human nature (as moulded by the law of every man for himself) as to believe that the silver men of Colorado are giving their lives to works of philanthropy?—Laborer.

How absurd it is for the populists to demand that a currency can be floated based upon the products of the farmers and mechanics. How much better it is for the government to issue bonds, sell these bonds to the gold bugs and money lords and then issue a currency based upon bonds! It is true the bonds are based upon the products of the farmers and mechanics ultimately, but to allow the mudsils to issue currency directly upon their own property without the intervention of Messrs. Bondholder and Banker would be an innovation entirely destructive to that benificent institution called interest. Such financeering as that would not be circumlocution enough, and would dispel the mysteries of finance. It would show the people that money is only a medium of exchange, a tool of trade and does not need the mystic surroundings of a national banker to give it sufficient value to accomplise its legitimate functions. The laboring men of the country financiers indeed! Does the country believe Shylock is to let go so easily? Preposterous.—Ex.

I have derived a great benefit from Beggs, Blood Purifier and Blood Maker and will take great pleasure in recommending it to all I meet.—Chas Hill, Aberdeen, O. —For sale by J. [illegible] son Druggest.

Two young gentlemen, George Glass and George Laird of Glasston, N. D. on their return from the Rainy Lake gold region called on us and left a specimen of gold ore and gave some information in regard to the prospects of that region. They They had been absent for over a month and had looked the field over as carefully as the deep snow would permit and pronounced themselves well pleased with the outlook, located a claim and will go back after navigation opens and commence operations. They had several specimens that appeared to contain gold in paying quantities. They wished us to correct the impression given out by some who had just simply gone there and immediately turned back, that there was nothing in the gold reports. Had these same men taken pains to learn something about the true state of affairs, their reports would have been different. There evidently is enough gold not only in Rainy Lake region but also around Lake of the Woods to bring Northern Minnesota into prominence during the next few years.—Hallock News.

S. M. Dainard one of St. Hilaire's leading citizens was a visitor to our town from Tuesday until yesterday. His business here was concerning the driving of an artesian well, which project was recently abandoned here, owing to the failure of the contractors who took the job last fall, in completing their work. At a special meeting of the village council held yesterday morning Mr. Dainard signed a contract whereby he agrees to go ahead and drive an artesian well, in consideration of the payment of the nominal sum of $1 down and $499 on the completion of the well, providing a flow of a certain volume is obtained. This reasonable offer provides for a guaranteed flow and successful well before anything material is expended and work will soon commence on the new well. It might be mentioned here that the first attempt made here was given up after the parties had gone down only about 60 feet, owing to their indequate facilities for coping with the rock met with, while Mr. Dainard has a first class outfit for the work and has been very successful in this kind of work other places.—Thirteen Towns.

I have been troubled for several years with scrofula, caused by impure blood, but could get no relief until lately. OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS

The board of county commissioners of Polk county met pursuant to call on the 21st day of March, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

All members present.

The board having under consideration the matter of settlement between school districts No. 152 and 64, determined and found on examination that the territory comprising the present school district No. 64 had contributed from the tax levies of 1891 and 1892 the amount of $69.50 towards the sinking fund so raised and levied by said district No. 152, and the said district No. 152 is hereby required to pay over to said district No. 64 the amount of $69.50 as settlement in full between the respective districts.

The petition of John Branot was granted, whereby his farm, the sw¼ sec 32, tp 153 range 48, was detached from school district No. 118 and attached to district No. 30.

The school petition of W. Schaper and others, asking for the organization of a new school district out of a portion of district No. 32 and 40, a hearing of which matter was set for this meeting, was granted in an amended form, whereby that portion effecting district No. 40 was left out of said petition, and that a new school district be formed out of the following territory, to-wit: all of sections 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 17, the s½ and sw¼ section 18, and nw¼ and w½ sw¼ section 9, tp 150 range 44, to be hereafter known and numbered 216.

The board refused to consider the individual petition of A. M. Easton and J. C. Reed on the ground that the petitions did not state sufficient or valid reasons for ordering a hearing set in the matter.

A hearing was ordered set for next meeting on the individual school petitions from Sane R. Teshbaek and R. Reierson to detach their farms from school district No. 134 to district No. 196.

The assessment of Hugh Traser in Sullivan township was ordered cancelled on the grounds as stated in a communication on file with the county auditor.

The bridge bids tendered by S. M. Hewett & Co., Wisconsin Bridge & Iron Co., Gillette Herzog Manufacturing Co., Chicago Bridge & Iron Co., were rejected.

The contract for constructing an iron bridge across the state ditch at the northwest corner of section 24, Hubbard township, was awarded the Wrought Iron Bridge Co. for the amount of 1,785 dollars.

The following report of the road and bridge committee was submitted and adopted.

To THE HON. BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF POLK CO.

Gentlemen: Your road and bridge committee having been instructed at a meeting held February 7th, 1894, to investigate the condition of the Red Lake river bridge at Red Lake Falls, with power to act, herewith report as follows: That on the 12th day of February, 1894, we examined said bridge and found all the timbers in the frame work or superstructure above the roadway in a rotten and decayed condition and consider the same unsafe for public travel, and further that on the 13th day of February, 1894, we entered into contract with Wm. Marin to rebuild said superstructure and furnish all material for the sum of 625 dollars, and that on the 12th day of March, 1894, we inspected said work and found the same done in compliance with the contract, and therefore recommend that the bill of Wm. Marin for the sum of 625 dollars be audited and allowed, all of which is respectfully submitted.

Dated March 21st, 1894.

M. E. KIRSCH.
C. P. DEMERS.
ANTHON LINDEM.
Road and Bridge Committee.

Lindem moved and Oppegaard seconded that the matter of establishing telephone instruments in the court house be indefinitely postponed. Motion lost.

Kirsch then moved that the county subscribe for two telephone instruments to be established in the auditor's and register of deed's office, at a cost not to exceed $2.50 per month for each instrument. Motion carried.

The bond accompanying the contract of the Wrought Iron Bridge Co., was duly approved by the board.

Sealed bids from Geo. D. Barnard & Co. and Brown Treacy & Co., for putting in a set of vault fixtures in the register of deed's and auditor's vaults, were opened and considered.

On motion of Kirsch the bid of Geo. D. Barnard & Co. to fit out the two vaults with files and shelvings as specified in their plans and specifications, for the amount of 1,700 dollars, was carried unanimously.

The following report relating to the amount expended by the county during the previous year for printing and official publications, were read, accepted and ordered placed on file.

To THE BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF POLK CO., MINN.

Gentlemen: Your committee appointed at a session held January 29th, 1894, to examine all printing bills paid to the official publishers during the year 1893, hereby report that they have examined the records and vouchers and find that the following bills have been audited and paid, and that said bills include all the official notices published from January 1st to December 31st, 1893, inclusive, as follows, to wit:

Women Dealers in Real Estate.

"Lucky real estate speculations are not confined to men in Pittsburg," said a real estate agent yesterday. "There is one lady in this city who has built and sold more houses in the last three or four years than any one else in the business. She seems most fortunate in her speculations, and often when others, who consider themselves better versed in property, have advised her not to make a venture, she has gone against them, following her own judgment, and, strangely enough, has always succeeded. She has never been known to make a losing deal, and her reputation for good sound judgment has caused many persons anxious to invest in dirt and bricks about the city to consult her. I know of another very lucky woman who is making much money in real estate deals. She is a typewriter on Fourth avenue, and started speculating by selling some lots which were left her by a relative. With this money she bought other property. This she sold at an increase, and so she went on buying and selling until to-day she has nearly $10,000 to her credit. This sum she has amassed in three years, with no capital to start with but two lots, worth, possibly, $200. There are many other like instances of lucky women in Pittsburg."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Improvements in Fancy Work.

When we have a revival of any fashion nowadays it is usually an improvement on the old, and the revival of fancy work done on canvas with crewels silks and wools is no exception. In the first place, better designs are used, and instead of an attempt at natural flowers and animals, conventional forms are used, worked in the softest, most beautiful colors that, because they are not crude and ugly, are called "art shades." The work itself is used for chair backs and cushions to be used in hall, library or dining room. They are particularly liked for covers to Florentine chairs.—New York Evening Post.

A Mitigating Circumstance.

"I don't see that there are any mitigating circumstances. You struck your wife a blow on the mouth and knocked out three of her teeth," said Judge Welde to a colored prisoner.

"Yis, dar 'is mitergatin sarcumstances."

"I'd like to know what they are?"

"Her teefs is holler, and she would hab had 'em yanked out anyhow purty soon."

Proof From The Plains.
Story of a Government Scout and Interpreter.
Kickapoo Indian Sagwa, a Valuable Remedy Known to the Indians for Years and Highly Prized.
Many of our readers have probably heard of Capt. Frank D. Yates, whose exploits on the frontier have given him a national reputation.
The testimony of such a man who has lived among the red men is incontrovertible evidence of the absolute genuineness of this remedy, and its repute among that race whose noble health—whatever may have been their faults—has always been famous.
Capt. Frank D. Yates, Gordon, Neb.
His endorsement of it is still further proof of its effectiveness. Capt. Yates writes as follows:—
Gordon, Nebraska, July 23.
I take great pleasure in recommending the Kickapoo Remedies, and have known of them among the Indians, as I have lived on the extreme western frontier for the past 30 years and am at present a Sioux Indian interpreter for the government.
My personal experience with Sagwa—which in Indian tongue means "THE BEST"—has been considerable, but one of the most wonderful effects from personal knowledge in my own case was the curing of Chronic Catarrh with which I became afflicted, owing to the great altitude of the country in which I had been living.
It did not at first occur to me to take Kickapoo Indian Sagwa for this trouble; and it was not until I had visited the Hot Springs, and I failed to obtain relief, and the disease had become so very alarming that I was afraid it would get the best of me and develope into consumption that I concluded to take Sagwa. I got one bottle of it and a bottle of Indian Oil. The effect was so marked that I immediately ordered twelve bottles of each, and now bless the day that the thought occurred to me, for I am entirely cured of the most disagreeable and distressing of all diseases.
I am satisfied I was cured owing to the perfect manner in which "Sagwa" purifies the blood; and I claim that Sagwa, taken in connection with Indian Oil, will positively cure the worst cases of catarrh ever known; and so far as the use of Kickapoo Indian Remedies as general family medicines are concerned, there is nothing on earth which can equal them.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

A BUILDING COLLAPSES, WITH FATAL RESULTS.

Four People Are Killed and Five Others Wounded, While Two More Are Missing and Their Bodies Are Thought to Be in the Ruins.

Memphis, Tenn., April 9.—This morning the brick three-story building, 154 and 156 Beal street, collapsed. Four persons were killed and five were wounded, and there are believed to be two others in the ruins. All the killed, injured and missing are negroes of the lowest class. The building was built in 1860, and was regarded as unsafe because of the inferior quality of material used in its construction, and the fact that for years water has stood in the two cellars. The first floor of 156 was occupied as a storehouse for feed by J. Wade & Sons. The upper stories were rented to two negro families, all of whom escaped unhurt. The first floor of 154 was vacant. The second floor was cut up into living rooms. The killed are: Amy Simmons, John Morgan, Will Cook, Lottie Marks.

The wounded are Andrew Harris, Catharine Boyd, Sylva Perkins, Georgena Guy, Cora Murphy. Lura Harris and Charles Harris are missing. Both were in the building when it fell, and the bodies of both are believed to be under the debris. Several hundred men are at work getting out the dead and wounded.

VERY BRAVE JAPS.

They Have Two Ships at Honolulu and Are Quite Independent.

Honolulu, March 31. — The Japanese question is the all-absorbing topic of interest here. Since the arrival of the new Japanese warship, the Takachihou, the Japanese have taken on a more independent air than formerly, and are openly claiming the right to a voice in the affairs of the government. A Japanese official, connected with the legation here, said a few days ago: "The Japanese here want the franchise, and they are going to get it. If they cannot, our government is going to take a hand. We have two big men-of-war here and we do not intend to let our interests be trampled upon by the provisional government." In the event of trouble it is feared the Chinese would unite with the Japs. The Portuguese have also made a demand on their minister for a warship. They claim they are in fear of an uprising, and that in case of victory for the royalists they would be disfranchised.

Operatic Success.

Chicago, April 9.—With the magnificent rendition of Carmen at the Auditorium the Abbey-Grau grand opera season closed after one of the most successful American engagements the company has ever fulfilled. The season has been notable for its great audiences and the successes of newly introduced singers. Aside from a remarkable list of artists, including such talent as the De Retzkes, Mme. Emma Eames, Mme. Nordica and Mme. Scalchi, the season brought forward Mille Calve, a really extraordinary dramatic singer, Mme. Melba, a vocalist who promises to follow pretty closely in Patti's footsteps, Mme. Sigrid Arnoldson, a delightful little soprano, M. Lasalle, a fine baritone and M. Planeon, an admirable basso.

Cinch on Cinch.

Lawrence, Kan., April 9.—The advance sheets of the annual chinch bug report from the Kansas experimental station, just prepared by Chancellor F. H. Snow, show that of 3,570 Kansas experimenters, 1,875 reported success. The severe drouth in the southern part of the state reduced the general percentage of success. Of the 1,875 successful experimenters, 326 made estimates of crops saved, and this reached $55,000, an average to all the successful experimenters, the total money value of crops saved is $312,487.06 in the three years. The money value of crops saved in Kansas reaches $600,000. The amount expended by the state to give this result is $6,258.

Bad Fire at Great Falls.

Great Falls, Mont., April 9.—At 2:30 this morning two frame buildings in West Great Falls were totally destroyed by fire. The loss is about $3,000; no insurance. They were owned and occupied by Polacks. The fire department is now at work on a fire in the roof of the opera house and seems to be making little headway against it, the wind being heavy and the fire in an almost inaccessible point. The opera house was built three years ago at a cost of $50,000, and is the best appointed one in Montana.

Strike of Painters.

Indianapolis, April 9.—All the union painters in the city to-day joined the striking carpenters in a demand for an increase in wages. A communication sent to the contractors several days ago asking for an increase was ignored, and to-day's strike resulted. The men have been receiving 25 and 27 1-2 cents an hour, and ask for an increase equal to that demanded by the carpenters.

Anarchistic Rioters.

Brussels, April 9.—There was a parade of anarchists here last evening. A black flag was carried in the procession, which was very disorderly, the anarchists continually shouting "Death to the bourgeois!" Finally the anarchists came into collision with the police. There was a sharp fight, and six of the leaders were arrested.

News Long Coming.

Rome, April 9. — Dispatches received here from Zanzibar announce that Prince Eugene Ruspoli, son of the mayor of Rome, while on an exploring expedition on Dec. 4 last, was killed by an elephant. The late prince's caravan reached Zanzibar to-day after a long and wearisome journey from the Somali district, where the prince met his death.

Strike of Girls.

Dubuque, Iowa, April 9.—Two hundred and twenty-five girls employed in Lovell's overall factory struck to-day because the company refused to restore wages reduced last fall.

Young Soldiers and Sailors.

Moorhead, Minn., April 9.—The result of the examination for cadetships at West Point and Annapolis, which were held here, are: West Point; Clifford Game, Moorhead, first; Karl L. Knudson, Audubon, alternate. Annapolis, George C. Thorp, Hancock, first; H. W. Teague, Detroit, alternate.

Marshall, Minn., April 9.—In the Second district West Point examination Herbert E. Bradley of Louisburg, Lac qui Parle county, stood first. Ezra S. Wardell of Tracy, Lyon county, is the alternate.

A Minister Fined.

Indianapolis, Ind., Special.—Rev. W. J. Myrant, from Hicksville, Ohio, attending the missionary state conference of the Evangelical society, was arrested yesterday for defacing the soldiers' monument. He scratched his name on the stonework. He was fined $10 and costs.

Receiver for a Road.

Watertown, S. D., Special.—Dr. F. E. Spaulding was to-day appointed receiver for the Watertown & Lake Kampasca railroad. It is a suburban route and runs out to Lake Kampasca. The receiver says it will be operated during the summer.

FIRE WORKS EXPLOSION.

Ten People Killed and Others Injured at Petersburg, Va.

Petersburg, Va., April 9.—Late Saturday evening fire originated in the fireworks factory of C. N. Romaine & Bro., where powder for whistle bombs was made. The flames were soon communicated to the other buildings used for making fireworks and there were frequent small explosions. On the opposite side of the street from the fireworks building —all of which were frame structures— was the trunk factory of Messrs. Romaine Bros., and close by were the large brick tobacco factory of Bland Bros. & Wright and the old whisky distillery now unused. All these buildings, with stock and machinery, were burned to the ground, as was also a stock of lumber. There were three explosions. The first was a small affair. As soon as it occurred Messrs. Romaine, Bland and Tosh rushed into the drying room and there the second explosion occurred and they were killed. A number of employes in the fireworks factory escaped just before the second explosion.

The killed number ten. They were Charles N. Romaine, Capt. James T. Tosh, John B. Bland, James Rowland, Robert Rowland, William Traylor, Ed Troylor, James Bryant, Quincy Livesay, J. W. Perkins, Thomas Woodfolk (colored).

The wounded are Edward Farley, A. W. Redgrave, William Parker, Charles Wells, Charles Short, Walter Nunnally, Estith Beasley, Samuel E. Drury (colored) and Charles Unery.

Smallpox on Board.

New York, April 9.—Smallpox and icebergs cut an important figure in the log of the Dutch steamer Obdam, which arrived to-day, from Rotterdam. April 3 an iceberg seventy feet high and 250 feet thick, with a smaller one near by, was seen in latitude 43:49, longitude 45:58. On March 29 S. De Boen, the fourth engineer of the steamer, was stricken with smallpox. The after part of the ship was at once roped off and no person allowed near the sick man, a quartermaster being kept of watch day and night to prevent any communication. All the crew was immediately vaccinated. On the arrival of the steamer Dr. Jenkins had the patient transferred to the reception hospital and the vessel was thoroughly disinfected and cleaned, after which she was allowed to proceed to the dock.

Conspirators Checkmated.

Madrid, April 9.—The governor general of Cuba has sent to Senor Becerra, minister of colonies, details of the frustration by the government of Cuba of a revolutionary conspiracy. The leader of the movement, Gen. Gomez, had collected 2,000 rifles, intended for the use of insurgents in Cuba. Gomez was directing the movements of the conspirators from San Domingo, and was closely watched by the Spanish consul there. On April 4 Gomez sailed for New York and all the known facts were communicated to the governor general. The military authorities were advised of the plot and a close watch was kept. The landing of arms and ammunition was effected but they were soon seized.

Surrender to Insurgents.

Buenos Ayres, April 9.—Notwithstanding the order of the Brazilian government forbidding the transmission of dispatches from Rio Grande do Sul advices have reached here to the effect that the government gunboat Cananea has surrendered to the insurgent fleet at Rio Grande do Sul. The land forces of the insurgents number 6,000 men, all of whom are well armed and plentifully supplied with provisions. The The Portuguese warships Mindello and Offonso de Albuquerque, which came here from Rio de Janeiro having on board Admiral da Gama and a number of other insurgents, have sailed hence. Their destination is not known.

Venice en Fete.

Venice, April 9.—This city is still en fete because of the presence here of King Humbert and the German emperor. Yesterday their majesties lunched at the palace and in the afternoon visited the Palazzo Ducal church. The emperor has made a close inspection of the art treasures of the palace of the Doges, and has been impressed by their beauty and worth. King Humbert has decided to visit Queen Victoria at Florence to-morrow. He will be accompanied by Queen Margherita and the crown prince.

Saved Time.

Manitowoc, Wis., April 9.—Twenty-five of the wealthiest farmers in Manitowoc county appeared at the county jail Saturday and entered complaints against themselves for violating the state game laws. They were given a hearing and each received a sentence of twenty-four hours in jail. They were on the game warden's list and surrendered to save time.

A Town Treasurer Short $200.

Fergus Falls, Minn., April 9.—Michael Utz, town treasurer of the town of Gorliss, who is over $200 short in his accounts, has been arrested and is now in the county jail awaiting the action of the grand jury. His defalcation was known several weeks ago, but when the town constable went after him he made an armed resistance and was not taken. Another constable went after him, and, after driving him into the cellar, captured him. Utz is a Pole. He pleaded guilty at his hearing, and the bail was fixed at $1,000.

Evidently a Double Lynching.

Selma, Ala., Special.—A gentleman from Autauga county reports the finding of the bodies of two negro men floating in Mulberry creek, about nine miles from Selma. The two were tied together with a rope and their ears were cut off. They are believed to have been the murderers of Mrs. Jessie Rucker in Chilton county several weeks ago. One of the bodies was identified as that of a desperate negro who resided in Chilton county. The people of Chilton since Mrs. Rucker's death, will not allow an unemployed negro to stop in that portion of the county unless he has a letter of recommendation from some white man who is well known.

HE BROUGHT HIM IN.

The Judge Told Martin to Bring Him in, Dead or Alive, and He Came.

Old Judge Allison was a famous character in Kentucky in the early days following the war, and as time passed his popularity seemed to increase. They called him judge long before he was elected to the office, perhaps on the theory that he deserved some title and had never earned any in the military line.

He had been a man of substance in slavery days, and, among other property, owned a black man named Martin, a very excellent fellow. Martin was a blacksmith, and was allowed by his master to do work for pay whenever he had time enough to devote to it.

After the war Martin refused to leave the judge, and while devoting more of his labor to the paying public he was at all times subject to the call of his former master.

There was a contest for the office of county judge, and Allison became a candidate. He was not a trained lawyer, and had no legal experience of any kind. But he was a man of the soundest sense, and his great popularity overbalanced all criticism. He was elected.

One night some hogs were stolen from a field right across the road from Martin's blacksmith shop and Martin was arrested and charged with the crime. He was terribly frightened. Hog stealing in Kentucky is one of the unpardonable sins, says the Chicago Herald, and a prisoner convicted of it is sure of a heavy sentence at the hardest labor.

Martin stood trembling before Judge Allison and declared that he had not stolen the hogs.

"Don't lie, Martin," said the magistrate sternly.

"'Fore God, Marse Judge Allison," protested the prisoner, with a frightened negro's admixture of all the titles of honor, both before and since the war, "'Fore God I never took 'em. I 'low I don't haf to steal. I'se got a good trade, I is. I buy my po'k."

"It don't seem reasonable, Martin. But somebody must have stolen them. If it wasn't you, who was it?"

"Well, I know who it was, judge."

"You do?"

"Yessa."

"Who?"

"It was dat triflin' nigga on Colonel Bascom's place."

"Pete Willit?"

"Yessa. It was Pete Willit."

"How do you know?"

"'Cause the man't stole dem hogs took a wrench from my shop to git the gate off with. And, Pete, he brought back my wrench, and he laughed, and he 'low Ise a fool—eatin' salt po'k while he have spare-ribs."

"He did, did he?"

"Yessa."

"Well, Martin, you go and git Pete Willit. Git that nigger and bring him in here."

"I 'fraid he won't come, Marse Judge."

"You bring him, dead or alive—do you hear?"

"Yessa."

And Martin vanished without the ghost of a bail bond or the hint of a guard.

Early next day Judge Allison was listening to a case of common assault when he heard a rather unusual commotion outside and looked up to see Martin standing in the doorway, hat in hand, with a puzzled expression on his face and a crowd of excited people behind him.

"Here's dat nigga, Marse Judge," he said, with a tone which indicated he was resuming a subject dropped but a moment before.

"What nigger?" demanded the judge, soberly.

"Dat Pete Willit."

"Oh! Oh, yes. Well, bring him in."

"Why, he's dead, Marse Judge. I cain't bring him in."

"Dead! What do you mean?"

"Why, Marse Judge Allison, you tole me to fetch him dead or alive, an' he wouldn't come, so I had to kill him. But I fotch 'im."

Judge Allison said afterward he never was more embarrassed in his life.

But what became of Martin, the negro?

Well, Martin was indicted, but he was admitted to bail and went on about his business. Pete Willit was undoubtedly the thief, and public sentiment would not have permitted Martin to suffer. His case was postponed term after term, and at last was simply pigeon-holed somewhere and left to die. It hasn't been heard of in fifteen years.

Egg-Eating by Fowls.

Egg-eating hens are often the result of a habit formed by having access to broken eggs, though in other cases the habit comes from an innate hunger born of the lack of proper food elements containg the nitrogen and the phosphate and eat the eggs to obtain them.

The Poultry Yard says: The habit of egg-eating by the hen is, at times, a very serious one with which to deal, though I never have been troubled with it but once, and then for a short time only. As I breed no fowls but Partridge-Cochins, I presume I am not troubled as much as those who breed the smaller kinds of fowls, for I think the Asiatics are not so apt to acquire the habit in question as are the smaller breeds, for the former are generally possessed of a quiet disposition, while the latter, especially the Leghorns, are very active.

As preventives are better than cure, I will suggest a few which I practice. According to my judgement the habit of egg-eating is oftenest formed by having soft or thin-shelled eggs laid in the nest. These are almost sure to be broken by the hen while on the nest, and she will be very apt to eat the broken eggs. Then, first, feed your hens shells, meats and such a variety of food that all the eggs will be likely to have hard shells.

Occasionally there is a hen that never lays other than soft-shelled eggs, and she will soon acquire the habit of eating eggs. The best remedy for such an egg-eater is to give your hens plenty of work, especially the smaller breeds, for "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." Strew thickly over the hen house floor, or small yards, leaves from the woods, or chaff from the hay loft, in which scatter wheat, oats, screenings or the coarser parts of cracked corn. To find the food thus scattered, and partly hidden, will give the hens capital employment during the close confinement of the winter time and is most excellent to keep them out of mischief.

The Unrepresented.

The members of Sorosis are such busy women that, even though they may attain a very familiar intimacy at the monthly meetings, it sometimes happens that they are not what are known as calling acquaintances. "We have even reached a stage of calling one another by the first name," said one Sorosian, "without having any knowledge of each other's family affairs. I was supposed to be a widow for a long time, until I casually remarked that I had a particularly healthy husband, who weighed 200 pounds.—New York Times.

For Revenue Only.

"Could you tear off a few little pieces from those silk patterns?" asked Mrs. Sam Handwich, who was looking for pieces for a crazy quilt.

"I should be delighted to do so," replied the clerk, "but you see this house is in favor of a tear-off for revenue only."

That Was Different.

He—If you do not love me why did you encourage me?

She—I? Encourage you?

"For two seasons you have accepted every one of my invitations to the theater."

"That was not because I loved you; it was because I loved the theater."

The humming of telegraph wires is not caused by the wind, for it is heard during dead calms. Changes of temperature, which tighten or loosen the wires, probably produce the sound.

"German Syrup"
Just a bad cold, and a hacking cough. We all suffer that way sometimes. How to get rid of them is the study. Listen—"I am a Ranchman and Stock Raiser. My life is rough and exposed. I meet all weathers in the Colorado mountains. I sometimes take colds. Often they are severe. I have used German Syrup five years for these. A few doses will cure them at any stage. The last one I had was stopped in 24 hours. It is infallible." James A. Lee, Jefferson, Col.

The lady whose portrait heads this article is Mrs. Mary F. Covell, of Scotland, Bon Homme Co., S. Dak. She writes to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y., as follows: "I was sick two years with 'falling of the womb' and leucorrhœa previous to taking your medicines. I took six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and was entirely cured of both in six months; it is four years this month, since I was entirely well of both those diseases and have never had any signs of their appearance since and I am satisfied the 'Favorite Prescription' saved my life, for I could hardly walk around when I commenced taking that medicine and I think it is a God's blessing to me that I took it.
I was pronounced incurable by the best doctors here in the West. I gave up all hopes and made up my mind that I was to be taken away from my husband and baby of two years old. I was sick all of the time —could not eat anything at all. In one week, after beginning the use of the 'Favorite Prescription' my stomach was so much better that I could eat anything: I could see that I was gaining all over, and my husband then went and got me six bottles; I took three of them and my stomach did not bother me any more.
We sent to you and got the People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, and found my case described just as I was: we did what the book told us, in every way; in one month's time I could see I was much better than I had been; we still kept on just as the book told us, and in three months I stopped taking medicine, and to-day, I can proudly say I am a well women, yes, am well, strong and healthy.
When I began to take your medicine my face was poor and eyes looked dead. I could not enjoy myself anywhere, I was tired and sick all the time. I could hardly do my house-work, but now I do that and tend a big garden, help my husband and take in sewing."
The following will prove interesting to feeble women generally, and especially so to those about to become mothers. Mrs. Dora A. Guthrie, of Oakley, Overton Co., Tenn., writes: "I never can thank you enough for what your treatment has done for me; I am stronger now than I have been for six years. When I began your treatment I was not able to do anything. I could not stand on my feet long enough to wash my dishes without suffering almost death; now I do all my house-work, washing, cooking, sewing and everything for my family of eight. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best medicine to take before confinement that can be found; or at least it proved so with me. I never suffered so little with any of my children as I did with my last and she is the healthiest we have. I recommend your medicines to all of my neighbors and especially 'Favorite Prescription' to all women who are suffering. Have induced several to try it, and it has proved good for them." Yours truly,
Dora A. Guthrie
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions and irregularities, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness of the ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a scientific medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness or nausea, due to pregnancy, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use will prove very beneficial.
Dr. Pierce's Book, "Woman and Her Diseases," (168 pages, illustrated), giving successful means of home treatment, can be had (sealed in plain envelope) by enclosing 10 cts., in one cent stamps, to pay postage, to the Doctor, at his address, as given at the beginning of this article.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, March 13.—Mr. Blanchard, the newly appointed senator from Louisiana, was presented to the senate at the opening of that body to-day, and took the oath of office. The resolution of Senator Peffer calling for an investigation as to senators speculating in Wall street was, on motion of Mr. Gorman, laid on the table by a vote of 33 to 27. The seigniorage bill was then taken up and Mr. Vilas resumed his speech in opposition to the measure. Mr. Allison of Iowa made the speech which he was not well enough to deliver last Friday.

The day in the house was devoted entirely to the consideration of a bill relating to the extension of the time for allowing a street railroad company in this city to change its system of motive power.

Washington, March 14.—The proceedings in the senate yesterday were of an extremely uninteresting character. Without the intervention of any morning business, except the presentation of a few petitions and the introduction of some unimportant bills, the senate took up the consideration of the seigniorage bill. Senators Stewart and Lindsay spoke in favor and Mr. Dolph spoke in opposition to it, holding that its passage would destroy the existing equality between gold and silver, and the two new senators, Mr. McLaurin of Mississippi and Mr. Blanchard of Louisiana received their committee appointments. Mr. Stewart of Nevada took the floor in support of the Bland bill.

The house yesterday began the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the government, and fair progress was made. Only three amendments of any importance were adopted—one appropriating $43,500 for lighting Hay lake channel; another of $64,000 for the public building at Buffalo and another of $90,000 for repairing the postoffice at New York.

Washington, March 15.—The test vote which was to be taken to-day on the seigniorage bill—the vote on Mr. Allison's motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed the third reading—had the effect of attracting a large attendance to the gallery. The senate early took up the consideration of the bill, and Mr. Teller of Colorado and Mr. George of Mississippi spoke in favor of its passage, the former criticising severely some statements made by Senator Sherman in his recent speech against the bill. Before Mr. George had concluded his remarks the hour for a vote arrived and Mr. Harris insisted upon the vote being then taken on Mr. Allison's motion, with the result that it was defeated by 28 to 45. It is expected that the bill will pass by about the same vote tomorrow. Mr. Manderson moved then to commit the bill to the finance committee, and this motion was also defeated by a vote of 27 to 44. The vote in detail is as follows on Mr. Allison's motion:

Ayes—Aldrich, Allison, Brice, Caffery, Carey, Chandler, Cullom, Davis, Frye, Gallinger, Hale, Hawley, Hoar, Lodge, McMillan, McPherson, Manderson, Mitchell (Wis.), Morrill, Palmer, Proctor, Quay, Smith, Stockbridge, Vilas, Wilson, Washburn—28.

Nays—Allen, Bate, Berry, Blackburn, Blanchard, Butler, Call, Camden, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Dubois, Faulkner, Gibson, Gordon, Hansbrough, Harris, Hill, Irby, Jones (Ark.), Kyle, Lindsay, Martin, Mills, Mitchell (Or.), Morgan, Murphy, Pasco, Peffer, Perkins, Pettigrew, Power, Pugh, Ransom, Roach, Shoup, Squire, Stewart, Teller, Turpie, Vest Voorhees, White, Wolcott—45.

The house is making wonderful progress with the sundry civil bill. To-day forty pages of the bill were disposed of, making in all eighty-three in two days, and leaving sixteen pages more exclusive of two paragraphs, those relating to the coast and geodetic surveys and the Missouri river commission, which were passed over temporarily. No amendments of importance were adopted to-day, although the Northwestern members made a vigorous effort to increase the amount for the survey of public lands. The appropriation for the geological survey which usually encounters bitter opposition, today passed unchallenged, the amount appropriated being $414,000.

Washington, March 16.—The seigniorage bill has passed the senate—44 to 31. The following is the detailed vote:

Yeas—Allen, Bate, Berry Blackburn, Blanchard, Butler, Call, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Dubois, Faulkner, George, Gordon, Hansbrough, Harris, Hunton, Irby, Jones (Ark.), Kyle, Lindsay, McLaurin, Martin, Mills, Mitchell (Or.), Morgan, Pascoe, Peffer, Perkins, Pettigrew, Power, Pugh, Quay, Turpie, Vest, Voorhees, White, Wolcott—44.

Nays—Aldrich, Allison, Brice, Caffery, Carey, Chandler, Cullom, Davis, Dolph, Frye, Gallinger, Gibson, Gorman, Hale, Hawley, Higgins, Lodge, McMillan, McPherson, Manderson, Mitchell (Wis.), Morrill, Murphy, Palmer, Platt, Proctor, Smith, Stockbridge, Vilas, Washburn, Wilson—31.

Friends of the bill say President Cleveland will sign it, while others claim that it will be vetoed.

The senate also passed the bill to amend an act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge over the Missouri river at Sioux City. The amendment extends the time for the construction of the bridge until March 2, 1896. A charter was also granted the Iowa & Nebraska Pontoon Bridge company, authorizing it to build a bridge across the Missouri river, near Sioux City, Iowa, and then after an executive session of thirty-five minutes the doors were reopened and the senate took from the calendar and passed a bill granting to the Duluth & Winnipeg Railroad company a right of way through the Chippewa and White Earth Indian reservations in Minnesota. Bills to extend the time for completing a bridge across the Missouri river between Kansas City and the town of Sibley, Mo., and granting right of way to the Duluth & Manitoba Railroad company across the Fort Pembina reservation in North Dakota were passed, and the senate adjourned until Monday.

The house put in the day discussing and amending the sundry civil bill.

Washington, March 17.—Senators representing both the Democratic and Republican sides of the senate committee on finance expressed the opinion at the close of the committee meeting to-day that the tariff bill would be reported to the senate on Tuesday. They stated, however, that no agreement to this effect had been entered into, but that the opinion was the result of a knowledge of the progress that had been made upon the bill since the full committee has been in possession of it. The entire time of the meeting was devoted to the point relating to collecting the revenue in both the tariff and the internal revenue reports, but it was announced at the close that this part of the work had been practically completed. Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Hamblin was again with the committee for the purpose of making suggestions and answering questions as to the operation of various provisions of the bill bearing upon its administration by the department. The appearances now are that the bill will have quite a large number of changes which they will agree upon. These changes will include the transfer of a number of articles to the free list which were made dutiable in the senate bill before the sugar duty had been agreed upon. The treasury department estimates make it appear that the bill will have a larger revenue than would be needed by the government, which will afford the committee an opportunity to make a greater number of articles free than would have been possible if the sugar duty had not been imposed.

Washington, March 19.—The house today resumed consideration of the sundry civil bill. When this is disposed of, which will probably be done to-night, the house will take up the four contested election cases which are pending — the O'Neil-Joy case from the Tenth Missouri district; the Williams-Settle case, from the Fifth North Carolina; the English-Hilborn case, from the Third California, and the Whatley-Cobb case from the Fifth Alabama. The O'Neil-Joy and English-Hilborn cases, which were both decided against the sitting members (Republicans) by a strict party vote in the committee on elections, are the most important and will require the major portion of the time.

The senate devoted itself to routine business of no general interest. It is probable that the fortifications appropriation bill will be reported from the committee, and if it should be, it will probably be taken up for discussion and put upon its passage. For the rest, there will be an effort to dispose of the government printing site, the Russian thistle appropriation and the McGarrahan bill, and of a large number of special bills on the calendar.

Lamps Flew.

Fergus Falls, Minn., March 19.—Hon. Thomas Cole was playing whist with a party of comrades in the G. A. R. post ante room, when trouble arose because the janitor, Comrade Charles Knapp, who was cleaning up, wanted a door opened, which Cole wanted closed on account of the draft. Cole finally struck Knapp. The latter, who is decrepit, retreated to the side of the ante room where the lamps sat, and, seizing one, hurled it at Cole. It struck him full in the face, breaking, and cutting him badly. Before he could rally, Knapp placed the second lamp with equally telling effect, gashing his neck fearfully. This was followed by a third, which also hit him on the head. This exhausted the lamps and Cole, who had now reached Knapp, struck him a blow which nearly felled him. Knapp, however, escaped out of the hall and swore out a warrant for Cole's arrest. In the meantime Cole went to a doctor's office, where it was found that he was badly cut with the glass, several arteries being severed. Cole bled so profusely that the doctor said he could not accompany the officer.

A Profitable Grain Palace.

Aberdeen, S. D., March 19.—The president and secretary of the interstate grain palace made a statement to the stockholders to-day of the financial condition of the corporation at this time. In addition to the building free from debt, the association has $277.54 on hand, after all debts are paid. The building, which has been used for a number of large gatherings this winter, makes the largest and most convenient assembly room in the state, and will be the most commodious room for political gatherings for years to come. The palace will again be used next fall for the purpose for which it was built, the exposition of the products of North and South Dakota. Already many improvements are contemplated.

Warm March Day.

St. Paul, March 19.—The thermometer at the weather bureau, Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock registered 75 degrees in the shade, which was the maximum point reached. This is the highest temperature ever experienced in Minnesota in March since the establishment of the weather bureau in this part of the country and since any official record has been kept of the weather. In fact, old Sol outdid himself by creating a temperature higher by 7 degrees than in any March previous. The highest temperature ever registered in March before was in 1879 on the 27th, when the mercury stood at 68 degrees. The next highest point reached was 64 degrees in March, 1874, on the 23d and 26th. Last year on St. Patrick's day the thermometer was only 85 degrees above zero and the snow was still on the ground.

Yeomans the Man.

Washington, March 19.—The president will appoint an interstate commerce commissioner to succeed Judge McDill, deceased, early this week. The chances are thought to be all in favor of the selection of State Senator J. D. Yeomans of Sioux City, Iowa, who formerly lived in Buffalo. Mr. Yeomans' supporters came from Illinois, Iowa and New York, and they embrace, besides both parties in the legislature of Iowa, and the leading railroads of the state, Illinois and Western New York. If Mr. Yeomans is appointed he will be the first railroad man ever appointed on the commission. All the others have been lawyers.

The Masons Get It.

St. Paul, March 19.—Judge Oliver has decided that in bequeathing $10,000 to the St. Paul Masonic Building association, the late Commodore Kittson had in mind the St. Paul Masonic Temple association, which will consequently receive the bequest. The matter had to be decided by the court as there was no organization in St. Paul known as the Masonic Building association.

Rocks Thrown.

Sheboygan, Wis., March 19.—A. P. A. Sims addressed a large crowd last night. A crowd gathered and a few rocks were thrown. Nobody was hurt.

KILLED BY A WOMAN.

AN ATROCIOUS CRIME UNEARTHED BY LONDON POLICE.

An Abandoned Woman Entices an Old Man Into Her Room and After Killing Him Places His Mutilated Body in a Trunk.

London, March 19.—This city has for a comparatively long time been exempt from murder, but to-day a sensation was caused by the discovery of a crime that in its details somewhat resembles the notorious Gouffe murder that occurred some time ago in Paris. The scene of this latest horror was in Grafton street, in the Soho district, which is infested with foreigners of the lowest class. It was in the immediate vicinity of the house in which the murder was committed that the police recently raided the anarchists clubs. An Austrian woman named Marie Hermann who is well known to the police as a night prowler, recently rented a small room in a house on Grafton street. On Thursday night last she, in company with an elderly man was seen to enter the room. Subsequently loud quarrelling was heard in the room by other tenants in the house, but as wordy wars were of frequent occurrence, no attention was paid to this. A woman named Hutchins, who lodged with the Hermann woman on Friday found blood stains on a sink, and spoke to the Hermann woman about them. The latter passed the matter off lightly, but on Saturday she changed her lodgings, taking better apartments in Marylebone street. She took with her a heavy trunk which she asked should be carefully handled. The police were notified and officers were sent to the house on Marylebone street where the Hermann woman had taken up her residence and search made of the apartments occupied by her. The trunk which the woman had been so careful about was in the room. The police forced it open and found in it the body of the missing man. His head had been battered, evidently with some blunt instrument. The body presented a frightful appearance, and the clothing in which it was attired was drenched with blood. The Hermann woman was at once taken into custody on a charge of wilful murder. The body has been recognized as that of a well-to-do ex-job printer named Stevens. He was seventy-six years old.

THE POLLARD CASE.

Col. Breckinridge Will Testify in His Own Behalf.

Washington, March 19.—The legal complications and moral side issues of the Breckinridge case which are gradually coming to light as the trial progresses increase the public interest here in Washington where the Kentucky orator is best known and make it the most sensational scandal ever reviewed in the criminal courts here. Curiosity is rampant among lawyers as to the line of defense which the array of five able lawyers retained by the congressman have marked out for him. For a time after the revelation of the secret marriage of Col. Breckenridge to Mrs. Wing in New York on April 29 was made public, it was the general opinion that this circumstance would form the basis of the defense, but to-day the attorneys for Mr. Breckinridge have intimated to the contrary. Even had they not said so it is a fact that all the promises of marriage alleged by Miss Pollard to have been made to her, except the statements in the presence of Maj. Moore, were before the date of the clandestine marriage. Moreover, it seems to be established by a preponderance of the authorities that the promise to marry made by a married man, furnishes ground for a breach of promise action in case it is accepted in good faith by the other party, who is ignorant of his legal disability to fulfill the contract. The mystery of the defense will be solved in a few days, however, for it is the present intention to place Col. Breckinridge on the witness stand as the first witness in his own behalf.

Permitted to Drown.

San Francisco, March 19.—Mrs. Mollie Martin, wife of a saloonkeeper, her daughter Ora, aged six, and Miss Nellie McCarthy, who lived with the Martins, were drowned in the bay by the capsizing of a yacht. They were out on a pleasure trip with Peter Thornburg, a Swedish sailor. The latter gave the tiller to Mrs. Martin while he adjusted the sails. She was inexperienced; threw the boat too close to the wind and it turned over. All managed to hold on to the overturned boat which drifted with the ebb of the tide past the British ship Mary Down. Thornburg claims their cries for assistance were heard but the officers refused to lower a boat, throwing out a life buoy instead. The women, exhausted, finally loosened their holds and sank. Thornburg was rescued after being two hours in the water.

Town Plundered.

St. Louis, March 19.—A special to the Republic from Chattanooga, Tenn., says: A telegram received by Chief of Police Hill from Ooltewah, Tenn., says that every store in the town was robbed last night, and asking that men and bloodhounds be sent to trace the robbers. Officers were at once sent with dogs and mounted horses to scour the intervening country. Ooltewah is the county seat of James county, and is fourteen miles from this city. The place has seven stores. The thieves looted each store systematically and loaded the booty on wagons. At one store they blew open the safe, but as the town has no officers their work was not discovered until morning.

Transborder Gold Craze.

Winnipeg, March 19.—Encouraged by the increasing richness of the ore in the main land of the Sultana at Rat Portage, near the Rainy river district, the proprietors have determined to increase the output and capacity of the plant. Two car loads of machinery are now en route to the mine, and when these are placed in position milling operations will be resumed. Meantime the quality of ore being mined is highly satisfactory.

Insane on a Train.

Laramie, Wyo., March 19—John O'Neil of Napa, Cal., became demented on the east-bound Union Pacific train yesterday and was placed in a hospital here. He had a through ticket to Dublin, Ireland, and also a draft on the Bank of Dublin for £80, besides about $160 in currency. It is thought excessive drinking and the high altitude caused him to become crazy.

Died of Consumption.

Kirkhoven, Minn., March 19.—Dr. E. B. Croner died of consumption in Colorado.

DIED SUDDENLY.

Mrs. John W. Noble, Wife of the Ex-Secretary, is Dead.

Washington, March 19.—Mrs. John W. Noble, wife of ex-President Harrison's secretary of the interior, died suddenly at her home in this city yesterday. The end of life came to her while standing in her dining room chatting with female friends and waiting for Gen. Noble, who had stepped from the room to call a carriage for a drive. She complained suddenly of dizziness, her maid caught her as she was falling, and before she could be taken to a couch she was dead. The cause of death was organic heart disease, regarding which she had been warned by eminent physicians, and of which disease both her parents died. Mrs. Noble was Miss Elizabeth Halstead, and daughter of Rev. Dr. Halstead of Northampton, Mass. She was fifty-six years of age, having been born in June, 1837. She was one of six children, all the rest being still alive. She met Gen. Noble while on a visit to Keokuk, Iowa, where he, then a soldier, was stationed, early in the late war. They were married Feb. 6, 1864, and during the remaining days of the contest she was at the front with her husband, seeing service around Chattanooga and Memphis. After the war she came to St. Louis with Gen. Noble, and here they have since lived, except during her husband's term as secretary of the interior. She leaves no children, two born to her having died early. Mrs. Noble has been a leader during her life in this city in charitable work and movements for the advancement of her sex.

HIS NARROW ESCAPE.

Thrilling Experience of a Carpenter in Chicago.

Chicago, March 19.—People in the vicinity of a new grain elevator in process of erection at South Chicago were horrified to see Joseph Coates, a carpenter, slip on the roof and slide rapidly to the edge. As he was going over the edge Coates grabbed a wall plate with his right hand and hung to it, his body being suspended at a height of 190 feet. Coates' eight fellow workmen were paralyzed with fright, and two of them fainted. Others soon recovered their senses and set about to rescue the man. All this time Coates was crying out to those in sound of his voice to save him. In the course of a few seconds the horror-stricken watchers on the bridge below saw a man appear at a window, and behind him were several other men. The first comer leaned far out until it seemed as if he would tumble headlong from the hole, but strong hands and a stout rope about his body held him securely while he reached out and grasped the man hanging from the wall plate and succeeded in getting him to the window ledge. Then with an almost superhuman effort both men were dragged through the window by the rescuers inside. The rescued man, when he found himself saved, fell over in a dead faint, and the rescuer, William Jones, another carpenter, collapsed completely. Coates, when he was finally revived was in such a nervous condition that he had to be assisted home by two of his fellow workmen.

DA GAMA ESCAPES.

The Brazilian Insurgent and His Officers Now Safe at Sea.

(Copyright, 1894, by Associated Press).

Rio Janeiro, March 19.—Judging from the course of events here it is thought by impartial observers that the Portuguese government does not intend to honor the request made upon it for the surrender of Admiral Da Gama. Da Gama took refuge on the Portuguese corvette Mindello when the insurrection collapsed. President Peixoto demanded that the admiral and the officers with him be delivered into his hands. The Portuguese minister declined to order the Portuguese commander to surrender the fugitive, and yesterday afternoon the Mindello and the Albuquerque, another Portuguese warship, having on board Admiral Da Gama and seventy of his officers, put to sea. It had been thought in some quarters that if the vessels attempted to leave the bay with the fugitives on board, trouble would ensue. There was not, however, the slightest opposition made to their departure, and as a matter of fact, trouble from this source was never probable. The destination of the warships is unknown. It is conjectured that they will go south to Montevideo and land the insurgent officers there. If they are landed at Montevideo they can easily, if they are so disposed, join the insurgents in Sao Paulo and Rio Grande do Sul, who are still in armed opposition to the government.

Depot Destroyed.

Denver, March 19.—The handsome union depot at the foot of Seventeenth street, covering two blocks from Sixteenth street to Eighteenth street, was burned in the early hours yesterday morning. The fire started in the attic of the west wing from the electric light wires, and at the very moment when it seemed as if the blaze would be confined to that wing flames burst out at the tower at the center of the main structure. Only the east wing and the stone walls are left. Nearly all the baggage was saved, but important papers and records were lost. The building was owned by the Union Depot company, four-fifths of the stock in which is owned by the Union Pacific Railroad company and one-fifth by the Denver & Rio Grande. The loss is estimated at $225,000; insured for $125,000.

Surprise for a Cowboy.

Great Falls, Mont., March 19.—Thomas Wegner, a cowboy from El Paso, Tex., rode up to the pawnbroker's shop of Sam Herskopitz, dismounted and, with leveled revolver, called upon Herskopitz for cash. The latter produced all he had about his person and was unlocking the drawer in the safe for more when a passer-by noticed the proceedings and, calling a policeman, interrupted the deal. Wegner told the officer that if he had not got the drop on him he would have been done up. The prisoner was armed with two revolvers and had a horse convenient for flight. Wegner is said to be a morphine fiend.

Both Men Defeated.

El Paso, Tex., March 19.—One of the hardest fights that ever took place in the West was fought yesterday between Australian Billy Smith and Billy Lewis of Butte, Mont. The fight was for $500. Smith weighed in at 152 and Lewis at 145. Lewis was knocked out in fourteen rounds.

She Hit the Wood Hard.

Pipestone, Minn., March 19.—Mrs. H. O. Anderson of Altoona, while splitting wood in the attic, jarred a hanging lamp down and the $1,200 house burned up and $400 with it. Insurance, $300.

TROUBLE IN DENVER

COLORADO'S CAPITAL VIRTUALLY UNDER MARTIAL LAW.

Militia Called Out to Enforce an Order of Gov. Waite—Nearly a Conflict With the Police and Deputy Sheriffs.

Denver, March 16.—The National Guard of Colorado is under arms, the federal troops from Fort Logan have been called out, and although martial law has not been officially proclaimed, there is no other recognized authority in Denver but the strong arm of the military.

This critical situation has been brought about by the determination of Gov. Waite to oust the two members of the fire and police board—Jackson Orr and D. J. Martin—whom he removed from office for protecting gambling houses and placed in office as their successors S. D. Barnes and Dennis Mullins. Messrs. Orr and Martin having obtained from the district court an injunction restraining Gov. Waite from forcibly removing them, were determined to resist to the utmost. They accordingly kept the entire police force at the city hall all day under orders to resist the soldiers if attacked. In addition, several hundred of the toughest citizens, many of whom have records as man killers, were sworn in as deputies by Sheriff Burchill and placed in the city hall as a reinforcement of the police department. Each deputy was armed with two six-shooters and instructed to use them in case of necessity. The police were armed with shotguns in addition to their clubs and revolvers.

The First regiment and the Chaffee Light artillery arrived at the city hall, and Gen. Brooks, commanding officer, delivered to Police Lieut. Clay, in command outside of the city hall, a message to the effect that if the removed police commissioners did not vacate within half an hour the offices would be taken by force. Orr and Martin refused to surrender. Before the half hour expired prominent citizens entered into negotiations with both parties to the controversy with a view to reaching a settlement by arbitration, and while the negotiations were in progress a truce was declared. The streets about the city hall were packed with an angry mob, numbering many thousands.

On the governor's representation that the state militia would probably be inadequate to cope with the mob that had full possession of the city, Gen. McCook called out the United States infantry from Fort Logan, thirteen miles from here, to act in conjunction with the state and local authorities in clearing the streets and preserving the peace.

Adjt. Gen. Tarsney, an old Indian fighter, placed the militia strategically in front of the city hall in Fourteenth street, with two Gatlings covering the two big Napoleons, loaded with grape and solid shot, trained on the city hall and four companies of militia in front and around them to stand the crowd off.

The excitement is intense and increased by the reinforcement of the local state troops, numbering 220 men, by the Boulder and Fort Collins companies, of the First regiment, and the Second regiment companies from Colorado Springs and Pueblo.

The state troops suddenly left the scene of expected hostilities at the city hall and went back to the armory. The regular troops from Fort Logan are stationed in front of the union depot, awaiting orders from Gen. McCook. The understanding is that hostilities have been suspended for the present.

Where is the Cash.

Chamberlain, S. D., March 16.—Aurora county has developed a case which is a striking parallel to the mysterious disappearance of the money at the Watertown land office some weeks ago. Whether the money in this case will be found in the same peculiar manner as that at Watertown remains to be seen. Particulars received here to-day state that a farmer named Babcock has until a recent election been treasurer of Center township. On the evening before he intended turning the township money over to his successor he claims that two men came to his house, called him out doors, and, presenting a revolver, made him give up the money, amounting to $350. He could not identify the robbers, and the only evidence procured was that horse tracks near the house compared with those of a team owned by a neighbor named Flaheert. Babcock had Flaheart and another man named McGill arrested as the guilty parties. They have had an examination, but were acquitted. It was testified that both men were at home seven miles distant at the time of the robbery. The alleged theft has many peculiar features. Babcock did not give the alarm until fifteen hours later. An investigation will probably follow.

Shot His Troublesome Tenants.

Shreveport, La., March 16.—Two desperate negroes were killed at the Mooring place by G. S. Noel. They had quarreled over paying their rent and when called upon drew an axe and a club on Noel, threatening to kill him. He killed Will Lane and mortally wounded his brother.

Northwestern Postmasters.

Washington, March 16.—The following postmasters were appointed to-day in Minnesota: Dora, Otter Tail county, R. W. Cullison, vice Ernest Schürmann, resigned; Sanborn, Redwood county, E. W. Rebstock, vice W. A. Hackley, removed. Stephen Rush was appointed at Rockerville, Pennington county, S. D., vice J. L. Carlin, resigned.

Strikers Will Resume Work.

Springfield, Ohio, March 16.—One of the largest coal operators of the Jackson district stated to-day that the 3,000 striking miners will return to work on Monday under the old contract.

Death at a Wedding.

Winnebago City, Minn., March 16.—C. M. Houston, living about six miles west of this place, dropped dead of heart disease last night at the close of his daughter's wedding. Mr. Houston had resided in this vicinity for several years and was esteemed by all who knew him.

Child Scalded.

Rushford, Minn., March 16.—The two-year-old child of I. C. Johnson was terribly scalded. There is little hope of recovery.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Five Hundred and Fifty eight ($558.00) Dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Peter E. Engh and Sidsel Engh his wife mortgagors, to Security Trust Co. mortgagees, bearing date the 30th day of December 1892 and with a power of sale herein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on the 31st day of December 1892 at 4 o'clock P. m., in Book 50 of mortgages, on page 264 Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Security Trust Co. mortgagees, to Joseph P. Moss by written assignment dated the 3rd day of July 1893, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on the 13th day of July 1893, at 8:30 o'clock a. m., in Book 61 on page 459, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore Notice is Hereby Given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed in said mortgage, viz: the north west quarter of Section Twenty three in township one hundred and fifty two of range forty-two in Polk County and State of Minnesota with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston in said County and State on the 17th day of March 1894, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes if any, on said premises and Twenty five dollars Attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

BREVITIES.

S. M. Dainard is at Crookston this week.

Gov. Nelson has set apart April 27th as Arbor Day,

Landlord Bennie, of Thief River Falls was in town today.

Our streets and the country roads are almost impassible.

Ducks are plentiful this spring, but very wild and hard to get.

School commenced last Monday and will continue for seven weeks.

Alex McKinnon, of Crookston, was in town several hours today.

D, A, Turner, of Crookston, was doing business in town today.

Joseph Smith, of Red Lake Falls, was in town a short time today.

W. E. Kelsey, of Crookston, was doing business in town last Monday.

Deputy Sheriff Losey, of Crookston was in town last Monday on business.

F. F. Stokes was in town a couple of days last week selling dry goods,

Dr. L. C. Davenport of Moorhead was in town last Mondry on business.

Too much water for traveling with a wagon but not quite enough for a boat.

It is rumored that we will have a wedding in town during the coming month.

Mrs. Kvalo, of Lyle Minn, arrived last Friday and is visiting her daughter Mrs. E. M. Hoff.

Carl Johnson came back from Otter Tail county last Friday where he has been visiting his parents.

Miss Lizzie Zarracher returned from Crooksoon last Friday where she has been spending her vacation.

S, M. Dainard has purchased Carlson's meat market at Crookston which he will run the coming summer.

We have been having some nice dark rainy nights lately and it is strange that our village council have not taken advantage of them to hold a few meetings,

Peter Lindbloom, the tall bad man from Black River, has been in town several days this week. Peter acquired a large load soon after arriving and at last accounts he still had it with him.

The rains the past week have been hard on the council proceedings posted on the jail roof. Would it not be a good plan for the council to instruct the street commissioner to stay there with an umbrella during a rain storm?

The ice went out of the river yesterday April 17th. It is nearly two weeks earlier than last season as last year it went out on April 30th. At this time last year no spring work had been done and it was not commenced until after May 1st.

Capt. M, R. Brown, of Crookston, was here last Monday with about a dozen horses which he tried to sell at auction. He succeeded in selling only a couple however. Evidently the farmer is not disposed to invest very heavily in anything this spring.

A Kansas printer in making up the forms in a hurry one day got a marriage and grocers notice mixed up so it read as follows: John Smith and Ida Q[illegible] were united in the holy bonds of sour kraut which will be sold by the quart of barrel. Mr. Smith is an esteemed codfish at 10 cents, while the bride has nice pigs feet to display.—Ex.

We publish in this issue a communication from Swan Anderson, of Wylie, in regard to electing a county commissioner from this part of the district this fall. Mr. Anderson's stand is well taken and we hope the matter will be agitated further; We need a commissioner from this part of the district which has never been represented. Let us hear from others on this subject.

For pure cussedness and lack of consideration for its passengers and the traveling public the Great Northern beats the world, but for accommodation and train service it is not in it with the Northern Pacific, which is the only road running into this section that is worthy of the patronage of the traveling public. When going south from Crookston take the N. P.—McIntosh Times,

J. L. Johnson wishes to announce to announce that he has received a full line of wall paper which he will sell at hard time prices.

Our correspondent from Georgetown takes a too gloomy view of the situation. As far as the creator is concerned this country has not been slighted. True the winters are long but the summer is also of sufficient length to produce good crops of cereals and the ground is exceptionally fertile and productive. We have fuel to keep within the body the heat that our climate fails to furnish We have peace and the environments of an enlightened age, All this does not say that farming pays or that the husbandman has nothing to complain about. We do not mean to say that, because we know a good deal. better. But the conditions which exist here exist with slight modifications all over the country and, with exception of the snowstorms, cannot be escaped by removing to some other state or location. Farming is as unprofitable in the New England states as here and the Southern states offer no inducements over the Red river valley in this respect. Tennessee is not flowing with milk and honey to the extent we were made to believe a year or two ago. While pork and beef have been high priced the farmers in the corn belt have prospered but in that territory land is so dear that a man without means can not obtain a foothold. We have faith in this country and this faith is never stronger than when returning from other sections of the country both east and west. We must arouse ourselves, drain our low lands, plant trees to stay the howling winds, quit banking on future prospects and vote right.—Norman County Herald.

Editor Spectator.

I see in the last issue of the Crookston Tribune the name of J. T. Herbert mentioned as the next commissioner for the 4th district, I think that the newspapers of the 4th district should agitate the question of choosing our commissioner themselves and not be dictated to by Crookston papers; and while I think J. T. Herbert would make a good commissioner both for the 4th district and the county at large (far better than the present incumbent) still I do not believe that the northern part of the district should always submit to the southern part in the choice of county commissioner. We have never had a county commissioner from north of the river and furthermore, I don't believe we have ever had a county officer of any kind elected from this part of the district; while in my opinion there are lots of men in our part of the district fully as well qualified and capable of holding an office as those in the southern part. Four years ago they promised us their support for the next county commissionership and did the same two years ago (for past favors rendered) and now I hope they will keep their promise. Of course if county division carries and in my opinion it will, it will not make any differance who would be elected commissioner from the 4th district to Polk county, but it is our duty to elect a man just the same and let us try to select one from this side of Red Lake Falls.

Prospects for seeding around here are about the same as they were two weeks ago only instead of snow we have the mud. I don't believe we can do anything to speak of this month.

The Strike.

The employes of the Great Northern commenced a strike in Montana last Friday noon and it has been growing larger ever since. Today we learn that almost the entire line is tied up from Crookston to Seattle. Not a wheel has been turned since Monday and last night at Barnsville and St. Cloud the men also went out with good prospects that the men at St. Paul and Minneapolis would follow suit, No train from the south has reached Crookston since last Monday. The train from Crookston here is running but we have had no mail since Monday. It looks at present as if all of the men would quit work and that the fight would be a long and tedious one. The mayors of Montana and Dakota towns have wired President Hill that the people are in sympathy with the strikers and that they will not protect new men sent there to work. The Great Northern have been cutting down the wages of all their men since last August and many are working for wages which will not support their families. The striking men ask that the old wages be restored and will not resume work until their demands are acceeded to. West of Crookston the wires are dead and no news can be had. Public sympathy is with the men and all hope that they may be successful,

I have been troubled for several years with scrofula, caused by impure blood, but could get no relief until lately. MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of five hundred and forty-seven dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John F. Fredrickson mortgagor, to Security Trust Company, of Nashua N. H. mortgagee bearing date the 29th day of November 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on the 11th day of December 1890, at 10:50 o'clock a. m., in Book 50 of mortgages, on page 1?? and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage viz:

The south-east quarter of section five in Township one hundred and fifty-two of Range forty-four in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 25th day of April 1894 at 1? o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated March 1 A. D. 1894.

Security Trust Co., mortgagee.

R. J. Montague, attorney.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Three hundred and thirty-eight dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Herman Lindner, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Security Trust Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 25th day of August 1892 and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 30th day August 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. in Book 50 of mortgages on page 19? and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

DOES IT WORK QUICKLY.

The Terrible Celerity With Which the Guillotine Takes Human Life.

The striking thing about the execution of Vaillant was the appalling quickness of it all. Action was so rapid, says a writer in the New York World, from the instant he appeared in the doorway of the prison to the moment the knife fell that it was almost impossible to distinguish the slight chain of incidents. He flung himself eagerly against the plank, was strapped to it and in the flash of a glance the plank was pushed forward on the platform of the guillotine. An instant's vision of a recumbent figure, face downward; in the same moment a head, with two staring, wide-open eyes, whirled almost defiantly, as it seemed, and with a slight zigzag movement, to the rightward, while simultaneously the pinioned body rolled inert, convulsive, into the capacious basket, also at the right-hand side of the guillotine. The swiftness, the mechanical promptness of the business fairly stupefied the spectator. It was impossible to realize that a human life had ended in less time than it would take to draw a full breath. The guillotine had done its work well. There was scarcely a sense of horror in the sight. Twenty-four hours later no one could have associated Paris with perhaps the most impressive vengeance society has ever taken upon the revolt. The Mardi-Gras festival was being kept as no Mardi Gras known since the bonanza days of the empire. In spite of the "London weather," as it is called, all the gayeties and graces known to French fun-making were ostentatiously visible in every quarter. Pageants of revellers filled the streets in theatrical garb. The concert halls contributed a cavalcade immensely successful in merry-making. Scores upon scores of high chariots, bedecked with every fantastic device known to stage management and crowned with the bedizened houris of the scene, kept the population in open-mouth delight from early morning to midnight.

YOUR GOOD HEALTH, if you're a suffering woman, demands Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. There's no other medicine like it, for women's peculiar ills. No matter how distressing your symptoms, it relieves your aches and pains, and if faithfully used will bring a permanent cure in every chronic weakness or derangement, in catarrhal inflammation, and in the displacements of women.

Dr. R. V. Pierce: Dear Sir—I can cheerfully recommend your valuable medicine, the "Favorite Prescription," to suffering females. Three years ago my health became so poor that I was scarcely able to do the household duties. I was persuaded to try your medicine, and I purchased six bottles. That, with the local treatment you advised, made me strong and well. My sister has used it with like results.

THE DENTISTRY OF TO-DAY.

Changes Since Washington had Teeth Carved from a Block of Ivory.

When we think reverently and admiringly of the father of our country, and of all the dangers he dared and the evils he encountered we are not apt to remember one of the hardest trials of his life; and that must have been the accomodation of his mouth to a set of teeth manufactured 3,000 miles away from that mouth, and carved, it is said, from a whole block of ivory. When he had contrived to accomodate himself to the momentous affair it must have been a singular revelation that his smile made, and Lady Washington may have found something trying in the face opposite her of the greatest and grandest of men. What a marvel in comparison is the dentistry of to-day, that knows how to preserve the teeth indefinitely while that is best, and so to preserve the shape of the face and the original beauty of the lips, and upon necessity can absolutely remove the bone, and put in its place the prepared rubber, to which the plate shall be riveted and clamped, till a fair face is made out of a ruin. And what a difference in the teeth made to-day to supply deficiencies, so light, so useful, fitting so smoothly in the plate, that one almost longs to see nature replaced and improved upon universally.

Yet in spite of the beautiful delicacy and regularity of the modern artifical tooth in general, a much better effect is obtained when the teeth are not so perfect, and each so exactly like its typical prototype. A little gold filling here, a very slight shortening there, a tiny gap, a hint of overlapping, an atom or two of unevenness at the end, all help more in the vraisemblance than matched and precise perfectness does. This, however, is more useful than for the vraisemblance in giving individuality to the mouth. All and each of these little peculiarities seem to express some idiosyncrasy of the person possessing them; they are like arresting and retaining points to the memory or the imagination. And provided they be not to obtrusive, and the teeth are sufficiently wholesome looking otherwise they do not at all interfere with the charm of "sugared lips parted with sugar breath." It is with difficulty, indeed, that any healthy teeth unless they are set in ugly and projecting gums, can do aught but add to the luster and life of the countenance. A man whose beard largely hides his teeth can even meet this difficulty, and is never at the disadvantage, so far as teeth are spoken of, that a woman is when these teeth are not all they should be. But great as the marvels of dentistry are, and life-like and comfortable as artificial teeth can now be made, unless one is willing to undergo operations that shall make some foreign substance act the part the roots of the teeth in filling out and holding up the cheek, and so maintaining the agreeable look of youth, one had best do all that is possible to preserve the original teeth, and forego any great personal knowledge of the dentist's powers.

She Understood Brazilian Warfare.

He was sad and sorrowful when he came to her, for he was going far away to be a soldier of fortune and he had never yet told her that they must separate for months, perhaps for years. She met him cheerfully, but when she saw the shadows on his face a chill came to her heart.

"What is it, Henry?" she asked trembling.

"Dear one," he sighed, "I am going away!"

"Where, darling?" she cried, throwing herself into his arms.

"I am going to the battle's front, to mingle with brave men who are struggling in a common cause for I am needed there."

"O, Henry," she sobbed, "you must not go. You will be slain and my heart will be broken. I cannot let you go to be slaughtered, darling; I cannot, I cannot!"

"But, darling," he said, trying to soothe her, "I must go. The Brazilian cause——"

"Are you going to Brazil?" she interrupted.

"Yes, darling," he answered bravely.

"O, won't that be lovely?" she exclaimed merrily. "Let me go with you." And the heroism of Henry went down in a frightful slump.—Detroit Free Press.

The March number of the American Journal of Politics contains a non-partisan article by Gen. C. C. Andrews of St. Paul on "The Demoralizing Influence of the Spoils System." The writer concedes that progress has been made in civil service reform as the clerks, below chiefs of divisions, in the departments at Washington, are appointed with reference to fitness rather than for party adherence. Also, Massachusetts and New York have established their civil service on a non-partisan basis. Still, he estimates that including national, state and municipal offices, there are about 200,000 appointments in this country that are regarded as spoils, and controlled by political leaders. No matter, the writer claims, how meritorious a record an officer may have made, he is liable to be removed to give place for a friend of an influential politician. Offices are thus practically confiscated. The injustice of the system weakens respect for government and leads to lawlessness. The remedy would be to place the civil service on a non-partisan basis.

Noisy Absorbtion of Poison.

Richmond, Ind., Special to the Chicago Inter-Ocean:—Indiana now has another madstone, the property of A. M. Thompson, of Marion County. It was brought from Glasgow, Scotland, in 1814, by an eccentric Scotch woman named Chloe Stout, and Mr. Thompson purchased it of her heirs at Lincoln Nebraska. The stone measures three and a half inches in length and two and a half inches in width, and is shaped like a half pear, while the surface is filled with minute pores. Before applying to a wound it is held to the fire and its temperature raised to blood heat. It is then moistened with warm water and applied. It is said that if the ear be placed on the bare stone while it is at work one can easily hear it absorbing the poison from the wound. It remains at work generally an hour, but often two hours, and the poison is afterward extracted from the stone by heated milk.

A TALE OF A PLOT.

One morning many years ago two boatmen stood on Deal Beach, gazing at a crowd of ships lying immediately abreast. One said to the other:

"Bill, see that there schooner lying in the wake of the little brig?"

"Yes," answered Bill.

"I was aboard her last noight. I couldn't see no crew to speak of. Three men and a boy. Them's all I noticed, and she's all two hundred ton."

"She'll be waiting for men, you lay," said Bill.

The other boatman shruged his shoulders. For some time they talked about other ships which floated in the crowd. The boatman named Bill then asked his mate if he knew where that little brig yonder was bound to.

"Pernambuca."

"What's her cargo, d'ye know?"

"Why, old Hammond was a-talking about her yesterday, and I reckon she's a rich ship. I'd like to have the salving of her. Old Hammond talked of pictures, pianofortes, and a sort of toy-shop consignment."

"She's middling deep with it."

After conversing for some time in this way, the two men repaired to a public house.

The Downs submitted a full scene of shipping that morning, but the light wind was foul for a down-channel run. Afar would glide some shining breasts of sail, slowly blowing Thamesward, or to the German Ocean, and at long intervals the light blue sky was tarnished by the smoke of a steamer. It was mostly canvas in those days, though the side-wheel had for some time been plying between France and England, and tall ships of an uncouth pattern were being paddled by like means around the Cape into Indian seas.

The breeze hung southwest all day long, but toward eleven o'clock at night it veered into northeast. The moon was then riding high, and the light under her, flashing from the southern limb of the Goodwins to the very shadow of the South Foreland, was a fan-shaped glory of trembling greenish silver.

By this light, to the first shift of the wind, above a hundred ships of all classes and denominations started to get under way, and the damp inshore night wind was merry with the music of capstan and windlass, and the songs of men heaving at handles and thrusting at bars.

The world has few finer sights to offer than a great fleet of ships of all rigs unmooring by moonlight, lifting their swelling heights of canvas to the stars, and moving, pale and silent, like a vast cloud over the face of the waters, every spire of sail waning in the moonshine till you might think it was a column of steam feathering out in the shivering splendor under the planet.

One of the first of the vessels to get up her anchor was the little brig the boatman had questioned his companion about. Scarcely was she under way when the schooner astern of her slowly mastheaded her mainsail as though with the help of machinery, and setting a jib, followed the brig, steering for the other's counter as if she sought the pilotage of a red lantern that hung there.

As the channel opened the vessels scattered. It might have been noticed, however, though there was nothing whatever significant in the circumstance, that the schooner, under easy canvas, continued to sail in the wake of the brig.

The wind freshened in the small hours. At dawn the brig was washing through it nobly under a maintopgallantsail. The land of England stretched along to starboard. Astern and on the port beam were several sail, and one of them was the schooner, leaning sharply over, the foam bursting in clouds from her shearing stern as she raced through the ridges.

A man on the deck of the brig, after looking at the schooner through a telescope, closed the tubes with a nod of satisfaction, and turning to a burly fellow who stood beside him, exclaimed: "It's all right Silas! Dick's got the scent. But we'll need to keep a bright lookout."

The person who spoke thes words was the captain of the brig, a man named George Butcher, and the seaman whom he addressed was his brother Silas, the mate of the vessel. They were as unlike as it is possible to imagine. George was a slender, wiry, dark man, sharp and restless of glance; his brother was a great lump of a figure almost shapeless, puffed about the cheeks, scarlet with weather and drink, with large protruding moist blue yes.

It was true, as the Deal boatman had told the other, that this brig, whose name was the Mermaid, was bound to Pernambuco, and the Deal boatman had doubtless good reason for alleging that her cargo was a valuable one.

Now, all through this day the brig stormed along, but when the night came, though the breeze had scanted somewhat, sail was reduced, and the mate, Silas Butcher, soon after sunset hung a large, brilliantly burning red lamp over the vessel's stern. There were four seamen, a cook and a boy, making with the boatswain, the captain and the mate, nine souls in all.

The name of the boatswain was Jonathan Cheap. At midnight he relieved the deck, acting as second mate. Time after time he might have been seen to step aft and look over the stern to see that the lantern was burning; and time after time he would carefully sweep the sea line astern and on either quarter with a night glass, doing in this precisely what Silas Butcher, who had gone below at eight bells, had done before him ever since it fell dusk.

It was on the afternoon of the sixth day following the date of the brig's departure from the Downs. The weather was fine, the breeze moderate, and the brig was rolling before it with a crow-like flap of her dark and ill-set canvas occasionally as she sank her round bows into the white brine.

Jonathan Cheap was aloft on the foretopgallantyard, apparently at work there, though had his motions been attentively surveyed from the deck, it would have been seen that he repeatedly, in a furtive way, directed a small pocket telescope at the line of the horizon on the starboard cathead. The mate and the captain paced the deck together, and both of them would often pause to gaze intently in the direction in which the boatswain peered.

An able seaman, named Samuel Carter, stood at the little wheel. The boy was in the galley, and two sailors were below, their watch being up.

On a sudden the boatswain from aloft sung out, "Sail ho!" and then, having apparently finished what he was about, at once descended to the deck and went aft to the two Butchers, with whom he exchanged a few sentences.

About an hour later the gleaming cloths of a vessel were plain in sight on the starboard bow; she came along fast, heeled by a press of canvas, and as the Mermaid's pace was good, George Butcher and his brother were soon able to make out that stranger which steered her course as though to intercept the brig was a fore-and-aft schooner.

They waited a little; then George Butcher, bringing his eye away from the telescope, said in a low voice to his brother:

When the schooner was almost in a line with the brig, she hove to, "scandalizing" her mainsail, as it is called, and letting go her halyards, and there she lay without headway, delicately swaying her somewhat elegant shape upon the long blue heave of sea, whilst from the maintopmast head there floated the red commercial flag of Great Britain, the Jack inverted as a signal for distress.

"Better heave to and see what he wants," cried George Butcher in a loud voice; whereupon Silas sang out for the main-braces to be manned, and the seamen of the brig brought her to a stand when she was within comfortable hailing distance of the schooner. Only two men were visible on the deck of the fore-and-after. One stood upon the rail and sent a melancholy howl across of "Brig ahoy!"

"Hallo?" shouted Capt. George Butcher, in response.

"We're in great distress," cried the man, in a melancholy, dirge-like key. "We're terrible short of hands. Can yer loan us a seaman or two to help us to our port?"

Capt. Butcher turned to the mate and the Boatswain Cheap, and appeared to consult with them. Whilst this was doing the two men whose watch was below came up out of the forecastle to learn what the matter was. Presently Capt. Butcher shouted:

"Schooner ahoy! What schooner are you?"

The man answered that she was the Eagle, of one hundred and fifty tons, bound to Cadiz; and he was about to proceed when he was taken with a violent fit of coughing. Thereupon the other man came to his side and called an entreaty that a boat should be sent that their story might be related.

"For we're both too sick to make ourselves understood by shouting," said he.

Capt. Butcher flourished his hand affirmatively. A boat was lowered, and he and the Boatswain Cheap, the able seaman Samuel Carter, and another went aboard the schooner.

The mate, Silas Butcher, walked the deck of the brig, and the cook and remaining sailors leaned over the side, watching the schooner. All saving Carter got out of the boat and went on board the Eagle, and Silas Butcher saw them disappear down the little companionway.

In a few minutes the man who had first hailed the Mermaid came to the schooner's rail and shouted with lungs whose power of delivery gave the lie to the statement his companion had made.

"You can fill on your topsail. We've got the men, and we mean to keep 'em!"

The mate started, and looked thunderstruck, and bawled back: "What d'yer mean? You can't leave us in this quandary. I'm mate, but I know nothing of navigation; and how can I work the brig with those men?" and he pointed to the fellows who were staring over the rail.

"We can't help that!" shouted the other; "we want a navigator ourselves, and hands to sail the ship, and the men we've got are the men we mean to keep."

"Then if that's the case," bellowed the burly figure of the mate, with many marks of distress and consternation in the motions of his arms and shapeless bulk of body, "take me, too, for I'm not a-going to be left here to drown."

The other signed with his hand, and calling to a man who was pacing the deck forward entered the boat in which Carter was seated. They promptly rowed aboard the Mermaid. Meanwhile nothing was to be seen of Capt. George Butcher and his companions.

The man who climbed over the brig's side was a square, stoutly-built fellow in a glazed hat and a round coat. The moment he showed himself Silas Butcher began to abuse him in all the injurious words he could find tongue for. The other listened coolly and then said:

"Is to be stay or go with you?"

"Why," cried the mate, "I can't navigate this ship, but I call those men to witness that you're thieves and scoundrels, and that under the mask of wanting help you've stolen a ship's crew!"

"Get into the boat," said the man with a scowl.

The mate was stepping to the side when the cook called out:

"Are we to be left?"

"There's no help for it. We're too few for them," growled Silas Butcher, doubling his fists.

"What's to become of us, then?" said the cook.

"You can come along with the rest," said the man who hailed from the schooner. "We can do with more—with all of ye. But bet your life that the men this here mate says we've stolen are the men we want and mean to keep."

A sharp discussion followed. It ended in the remaining sailors and boy bringing up their bags and getting into the boat, and swearing it was all one to them, that what must be, must be; and that they were not going to be left in the brig to wash about, perhaps for weeks, and then be found maniacs or corpses.

The mate, before stepping into the boat, asked permission to descend into the cabin to collect a few of his things. He was some time absent. The man in the glazed hat exhibited no impatience. Presently he appeared, the boat shoved off, and the brig was left derelict.

The breeze all this while was falling; when the people were on board the schooner sail was made and her head was put off southwest. Nevertheless it was contrived that the brig should be kept in sight until on a sudden she was seen to melt out against the western gleam. The man in the glazed hat was watching her through a telescope when she disappeared.

He said to Jonathan Cheap, who stood close beside him, "She's gone!" and immediately orders were given to crowd the schooner with canvas.

It was not until eighteen months after this that the mystery of the schooner's procedure and of the brig's abandonment was cleared up. Samuel Carter turned queen's evidence, and thus an extraordinary fraud was brought to light.

It seems that the Mermaid, with a worthless cargo, professedly consigned to Pernambuco, was insured in the Ocean, Neptune, Oceanic and other insurance offices for upwards of thirteen thousand pounds. The vessel was registered in the name of the Butchers. They told their story—how the captain and crew had been stolen out of the brig, which was therefore abandoned in mid-ocean. Cheap, Carter and two witnesses from the Eagle, men who afterwards swore that they had been frightened into complicity by deadly threats, testified to the truth of the Butchers' statement.

The insurance people, not being in those days so very critical in inquiry as they now are, paid the money.

A squabble over the division of the plunder ensued, and Carter turned upon his confederates. He said that the Eagle had been hired by the Butchers to follow the brig out of the Downs, and under the pretence of wanting men, to kidnap her commander and crew. The mate, Butcher, when he entered the brig's cabin, avowedly to fetch his clothes, scuttled her, and they waited to see her sink before they "cracked on."

The schooner went to pieces on a Bahama key, but all hands came off with their lives.

The Butchers were arrested. Cheap effected his escape, nor were the rogues who had taken part in the proceedings aboard the Eagle to be found. Abundant evidence was forthcoming, and George and Silas Butcher were sentenced to transportation for the term of their natural lives.—W. Clark Russell, in Youth's Companion.

PUMPKIN PIE.

A Vandal Argues That It Never Existed—But He Has Eaten Ginger Pie.

We find the pumpkin to be, apparently, the largest of fruits; but on cutting into it it is discovered to be hollow; the spacious interior being simply festooned with a clammy variety of vegetable cobweb, in which the seeds are suspended. Why the pumpkin should not grow like the orange is not apparent, unless it is simply to gain credit for size of which it is not deserving. Such gain of applause under false pretenses can not be too severely condemned. The pumpkin must be set down as a hollow and hypocritical vegetable, and association with it cannot but have a bad effect on character.

But we are not trying the pumpkin as a fruit, and further consideration of it in a raw state may be omitted. But we wish to raise the questions: "Does not some insincerity follow the pumpkin into the pie? What part does pumpkin play in the so-called pie? Is pumpkin food, especially for breakfast?" In the first place, let us note that the best chemical analyses of pumpkin pie show it to be composed of ginger and stewed pumpkin, with no traces of other minor substances. Next we are to observe that hardy investigators who have examined it say that stewed pumpkin in its native or pure state has but little taste, and that little is a bad taste. We now come to the fact that what we taste in pumpkin pie is ginger. By what easy and unassailable steps we arrive in the clear radiance of the truth that in the pumpkin pie the pumpkin is a mere medium for holding the ginger in solution, but that nevertheless it has fastened its name upon the pie. It is as if lemonade should call itself water. What the country has been eating all these years, at breakfast and otherwise, is ginger pie.

We cannot hope that our crushing exposure of the ingenuousness of the pumpkin from the hour of its birth upward will have any effect on the name of the pie in which it acts as the vehicle for holding the invigorating and honest ginger in suspension. So long as pumpkin is used as the base for a certain pie, that pie will continue to be called pumpkin pie. But is it not possible that another and better base can be found for the so-called pumpkin pie? Pumpkin being tasteless and unnutritious, there is no reason why it should be eaten even at breakfast. We scarcely know what to suggest to take the place of pumpkin, but wood pulp occurs to us. Wood pulp has been used for so many things during the past few years that it seems not unreasonable that it be extended to pie. It ought to be much cheaper than pumpkin, and would not have its disagreeable taste. It would also have the merit of being nutritious. With wood pulp as a background, as it were, ginger would be liberally projected upon it, and a pie produced which our friend, the New Englander, could with impunity sit up in bed and eat before breakfast. But a right start must be made with this pie; honor to whom honor is due; it must be called ginger pie.—Harper's Weekly.

THIRD-STORY CHICKEN-FARM.

A Full-Fledged Ranch Carried on in a Montana City Block.

People passing the Realty block within the past few days, says the Anaconda Standard, have been attracted by a novel sight in the window of one of the vacant storerooms. In a shallow wooden box, less than three feet square, their downy bodies in constant motion and their shrill pipings sounding even through the glass, are seventy-two chickens, apparently as happy as if they were in a barnyard under the care of a bustling hen. The box is a "brooder" and is the only mother that the seventy-two fluffy youngsters have ever known, and in it they have lived for the week that they have been alive. Prompted by curiosity a reporter sought out Mrs. Childs, the landlady of the building, to learn if possible whether or not she intends to start a poultry ranch in a three-story brick block in the city, and if she is, to learn how she proposes to run it. Mrs. Childs demonstrated very easily that she knows what she is doing, and that she can do it successfully. She has started to raise broilers for the market and intends to do it in her block. Mrs. Childs' apartments are on the third story and in one of her rooms she has two incubators, one containing 100 eggs, and the other 200. Here the chickens are hatched, and as soon as they get the use of their legs they are transferred to the brooder and taken to the basement, which has been divided into pens of convenient size. Here they live in the brooder until they are two weeks old, when they are placed in the pens and are allowed to run about and grow. And how they do grow in the warm room and what a noise they make with their incessant piping. When they are eight or nine weeks old they are ready for market.

Not Born to Die That Way.

Michael O'Reilly's lucky star must have shone over him, for he had about as narrow an escape from instant death recently at the Barus mine as was ever recorded. He was ascending the ladder-way in the pumping shaft above the 400 level, when one of the ladder rounds broke, and he lost his balance and fell into the shaft. He dropped about fifty feet and in some manner managed to grasp hold of a water pipe or something of the kind, and clung to it. Otherwise he would have fallen 200 feet to the 600 level and into seventy-five feet of water. He managed to swing to the ladder again. Another miner assisted him to a level. He was raised to the surface, and Doctors Wells and McCrimmon were summoned. They found that, aside from a fractured ankle and some painful bruises, the man was not seriously hurt, but the shock had been great. He was carried to his home in Dublin Gulch. Mr. O'Reilly has a wife and one child.—Butte, Mont., Inter-Mountain.

An Arizona Necklace.

A young lady of this city, whose brother a mining engineer, is now in Tucson, Arizona, recently received from him a handsome present—a necklace of artificial flowers, so rare in form and color that their likeness does not probably exist, at least outside that territory. Accompanying this gift was a description of its component parts, which were put together by a civilized Navajo Indian, through the chemical preparation of the materials, which are chiefly rattlesnake fangs, the legs of centipedes, and the scales of the Gila monster, was the work of the engineer. Subjected to a solution of sulphuric acid, the fangs became as ivory white and were used as stamens, the legs turned to a translucent yellow and were circled into petals while the greenish scales formed sepals and buds. Into the hollow fangs and legs were injected scarlet, and blue mineral oxides—the tints showing through. The flowers are connected by little links of virgin gold.—Philadelphia Record.

Facts Worth Knowing.

In all diseases of the nasal mucous membrane the remedy used must be non-irritating. Nothing satisfactory can be accomplished with douches, snuffs or powders, because they are all irritating, do not reach the affected surfaces and should be abandoned as failures. A multitude of persons who had for years borne all the worry and pain that catarrh can inflict testify to radical and permanent cures wrought by Ely's Cream Balm.

Disastrous Failure.

We can mention no failure more disastrous than that of physical energy. It involves the partial suspension of the digestive and assimilative processes, and entails the retirement from business of the liver and kidneys. Only through the good offices of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters can the restoration of its former vigorous status be hoped for. When this aid has been secured, a resumption of activity in the stomach, liver and bowels may be relied upon. The Bitters conquer malaria and kidney trouble.

$5,800 FROM TEN ACRES.

A. M. Lamb, a market gardener in Pennsylvania, cleared $5,800 on five acres of cabbage and five acres of onions. The reason of this, he says, was because Salzer's seeds are so extremely early and wondrously productive. Lightning Cabbage and King of the earliest onions he had in the market three weeks ahead of any other home-grown sorts, and consequently received fancy prices. Salzer sends 35 packages earliest vegetable seed, sufficient for a family, for $1, postpaid.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

THE GREAT STRIKE.

EMPLOYES OF THE GREAT NORTHERN LEAVE THEIR POSTS.

The Men Refuse to Accede to the Reduction in Wages Recently Made —The Whole Great Northern System Is Completely Tied Up.

Breckenridge, Minn., April 20.—No. 9 arrived here from St. Paul this morning at about 7:40 under the protection of four United States marshals. The strikers were at first inclined to interfere with all but the mail car, but were advised to the contrary. Injunctions were served on some of the leaders of the strike, restraining them from interfering with the road. Two passenger trains went east this afternoon. There is no probability of any further resistance to passenger trains here.

Barnesville, Minn., April 20.—The mail train in charge of United States Marshal Brown and six other deputies, arrived here at 9 this morning. The switches had been turned and spiked, but after the reading by Marshal Brown of the injunction from the United States district court, of which he was the bearer, and discussion among the men, the train was allowed to proceed at 10 o'clock to Fargo.

Mora, Minn., April 20.—Two men, discharged from the tie train crew, attempted to wreck a Great Northern train. They put a push car on the track and a velocipede on top. The men started to walk to Hinckley. The obstruction was discovered by Agent Long, who, with two assistants, overhauled the men and brought them back. They confessed and are in jail awaiting trial. They are not connected with the strike.

Washington, April 20.—Representative Johnson of North Dakota is indignant at the action of Judge Sanborn in ordering the summoning of strikers on the Great Northern road and compelling them to show cause why an injunction should not be issued against them to insure their future good behavior. He intends to introduce a resolution in the house looking to the impeachment of Sanborn for this, as he claims, unwarranted interference.

St. Paul, April 21.—A committee of strikers and officials of the Great Northern are holding a consultation to-day, and it is possible that the strike will be declared off this evening or to-morrow. It is thought that the trouble will be amicably adjusted, although it is possible that an agreement cannot be reached and that a long struggle will ensue, but the more conservative think that it will soon be settled.

A special train, of two coaches, loaded with thirty-five deputy United States marshals, in charge of United States Marshal Bede, went to St. Cloud to arrest the strikers who yesterday violated the injunction by cutting off coaches and resisting United States officers. Warrants for the arrest of ten St. Cloud strikers were in Bede's possession. The train bearing the officers consisted of two coaches, the majority of the officers occupying the one in the rear. It was a husky lot of men that the new United States marshal took to the seat of trouble. L. D. Foster, president of the St. Cloud union, would have been arrested in St. Paul last night but the warrants were not ready and this morning he could not be found. The arrested strikers, ten in number, were brought back to St. Paul under guard. The main portion of deputies were left at St. Cloud and will be used in guarding trains back to the Twin Cities.

Grafton, N. D., April 21.—The first train to move on the Great Northern since Monday was the Cavalier branch train, which went up to-day. Brotherhood men were in charge. Forty sacks of mail arrived this noon over the Northern Pacific for points on the Great Northern near here. This mail is carried from here on hand cars by citizens of surrounding towns, who don't want to be entirely shut off from the world.

Cokato, Minn., April 21.—Everything is blocked and much sympathy for the strikers is expressed. An agreement has been signed by nearly every business man not to sell to, feed or shelter non-union men if any should be sent here to replace the regular help. The paper also protests against the high express and freight rates of the Great Northern.

Crookston, April 21. — There are no trains on the main line, but the branches are running to-day.

Willmar, Minn., April 23. — A mass meeting of citizens and strikers was held on the platform of the depot, and the result of good council is that all mail trains will hereafter be allowed to pass without any interference. Archie Bogart, J. T. Carruthers and other leaders made this statement as the result of a brief conference shortly after the mass meeting. Five shrill blasts of a locomotive whistle aroused the town and called the people to the depot. The crowd numbered fully 3,000. A platform was hastily arranged of trucks and boards and the representatives were invited to take seats thereon with the speakers. Rev. Fr. Boland, the leading Catholic priest of this section, presented the railway men's side of the case, and said he was with them in their struggle to maintain their rights. He was with them only as long as they observed the rules of law and order. He counseled moderation and urged the men to commit no wrong and to cease interfering with mail cars. He read a telegram from President Debs saying a mail train is construed to mean the train in its entirety as usually made up. This opened the eyes of the strikers and they realized that they had been violating the government law.

Marshal J. Adam Bede was the next speaker. He laid down the law as it exists; said he was here as a government officer to enforce the law as he found it. If he could not enforce it peaceably he would call on the army to do it. He was witty at times and worked up a good feeling among the men, though they were inclined to resent his admonitions to keep their hands off the trains.

Whether Carruthers and Bogart can control the impulsive spirits in the crowd remains to be seen. At any rate they will try. Bogart and Carruthers will leave for St. Paul for a consultation with President Debs. Mr. Bogart said that no freight trains or freight cars will be allowed to move from Willmar and none will be allowed to pass through. Any trains that may reach here will be caught and sidetracked. Mr. Bogart and Mr. Carruthers say the strike is even more earnest than before, and that the men positively will not recede beyond the concessions granted concerning mail trains by reason of existing laws, and President Debs' construction thereof.

Saturday night Marshal Bede and a number of deputies attempted to take a Great Northern train through this town. The strikers took the train away from the marshal, who arrested several men. The marshal finally recaptured the train. It looked at one time as though the officers would be mobbed, but cooler judgment prevailed.

St. Paul, April 23.—The conference between J. J. Hill and the representatives of the strikers did not occur Saturday, as was reported. A committee is now on the way from the West, and the conference will not be held until it arrives. This will be some time during the week. L. D. Foster and H. E. Egbert, the two Great Northern strikers who were arrested Friday at St. Cloud on the charge of interfering with the mails and conspiracy to interfere with the mails, appeared before Commissioner Spencer, but hearing the case was continued until to-morrow, though it was expected that it would be given immediately. The decision to continue brought up the question of bail, and Foster stated that he had plenty of friends in St. Cloud with plenty of money back of them and could get all the bail that was required. He thought that bail might be arranged through one of the banks, and was told that in that case cash would have to be deposited. He was bright and cheerful while the matter was being adjusted, but his companion, Egbert, was taciturn and looked unhappy. Both men were held to bail in the sum of $500, the amount fixed by the commissioner for both charges, $400 for conspiracy to delay the mails and $100 for the charge of delaying the mails. The road is now open for passenger trains from St. Paul to Minot, N. D.

St. Paul, April 24.—It is not unlikely that the Great Northern strike will be over within the next twenty-four hours, at least so far as it interferes with the operation of the road. The uncertainty as to the decision of the strike during the last few days has created alarm and dissatisfaction in commercial circles all through the West, and Gov. Nelson has been in daily receipt of communications from business men and corporations all over the state urging him to use his authority in bringing matters to a climax. When the Great Northern offices opened this morning there was a great uncertainty as to the date of the proposed conference between the officials of the road and the strikers' representatives, as great as existed Saturday night. Nothing had been heard of the train supposed to be bringing Organizer Hogan and his committee from the West, and the officials of the company were mum with regard to its policy in the matter. At 10 o'clock the governor's messenger walked into Mr. Hill's private office with a communication for the president of the Great Northern, in the following language:

"Executive Department, State of Minnesota, St. Paul, April 24, 1894.—Hon. J. J. Hill, President Great Northern Railway. Dear Sir: For several days a strike of considerable dimensions, seriously interfering with the traffic and travel of the citizens of our state, has been pending on the various lines of your road. I am not clearly nor fully advised as to the grounds for the strike, nor am I qualified to sit as an umpire in the matter. But the interruption of public business has become of such a grave character, that I, as the chief peace officer of the state, have been appealed to for assistance. The people of our state have justly gained and always maintained a reputation as a peaceful, law-abiding and orderly community, where force or violence has never been in the ascendent, and where all controversies have been adjusted by agreement or the process of law. I am loath to have this reputation darkened or a shadow cast upon it, and therefore, in no spirit of criticism, I deem it my duty to inquire of you whether it is not possible, by some plan of arbitration, to adjust and settle the controversy involved in this strike, and to suggest to you that earnest efforts be made in this direction as speedily as possible and in such a manner as to avoid further delay and interruption to the public business and loss to all concerned. In the meantime, while such efforts are pending, law and order must be maintained and the property of the company must be preserved from injury or destruction at all hazards. Respectfully,

—"Knute Nelson, Governor."

Vice President Clough and the chief officers of the company were at once called into a conference with President Hill and the letter of inquiry from the governor was promptly considered. In fifteen minutes from the time of its receipt Mr. Hill was dictating the answer of the Great Northern, which was at once forwarded to the executive office. He agrees entirely with the governor's suggestion.

President Debs was writing a letter to the governor when a reporter called upon him to ascertain what answer he would give to the proposition for arbitration. He said:

"As soon as the full committee can arrive in St. Paul it will call on Mr. Hill and endeavor to come to a satisfactory and complete settlement of the dispute. I have every confidence that they will be able to accomplish this, but should it not be successful it will doubtless agree to any other method that may result in a settlement. The men will be just as fair as the company in the whole matter. This is the tenor of my reply to the governor which I am now writing."

Commissioner Spencer this morning continued the hearing in the Foster and H. E. Egbert cases to Saturday next, they having previously been set for today. Lloyd B. Egbert and Charles L. Cowley gave bail this morning in the total sum of $500, $100 for retarding the mails and $400 for conspiracy to delay the mails. The sureties were James Quinlevan and Charles J. Miller, both of St. Cloud. Paul Beaudreau also gave bail in the same sum with Frank A. Beaudreau and Isaac Solomon as his sureties. The case of Olson was continued until Wednesday. He has not succeeded in raising bail and has little prospect of securing sureties.

'Nother Chunk of Meteorite.

West Union, Iowa, April 24.—Another piece of the famous aerolite that terrified the people of Northwestern Iowa a month ago, and the main body of which appears to have struck near Oxford Junction, was dug up yesterday near this city. It was slightly smaller than a foot ball, perfectly round and black on the outside. It was broken and the inside appears of a darkish bronze color and seems to have been subjected to terrific heat. It was weighed and found to be proportionately heavier than lead.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, April 19.—Mr. Bland's coinage committee met to-day for the first time since the seigniorage bill struggle, and was treated to a genuine surprise. Representative Meyer of Louisiana was present to urge his bill for coining the seigniorage, and for low interest bonds. In doing so he stated authoritatively that the measure had the approval, and was in part suggested by Secretary Carlisle, and in the judgement of the secretary would be signed by the president. To this extent the bill was regarded as an administration one, and as satisfactorily overcoming the objections of Mr. Cleveland's veto of the Bland bill. The bill, Mr. Meyer explained, provided for coining the seigniorage, but so amended the resumption that 3 per cent bonds would in future be issued in lieu of the 4 1-2 and 5 per cent bonds.

The house to-day resumed consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. The excitement of the past few days has subsided.

In the senate Mr. Morrill delivered a speech in opposition to the tariff bill. Commander F. W. Dickens, United States navy, who attended the duke of Veragua at the representative of this nation when that nobleman visited the world's fair last year, was granted permission to accept the decoration of the Cross of Naval Merit, of the third class, from the king of Spain.

Washington, April 20.—The house is making very slow progress with the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. Almost the entire time was devoted to threshing over the old straw in the Hawaiian controversy. The text used as a basis for the debate—a motion to cut off the salary of the Hawaiian minister—was defeated when the vote was taken without division. About 4 o'clock half the membership of the house suddenly faded away to attend the opening ball game of the season, and when this was observed Mr. Cannon carried the committee of the whole to a vote on an amendment to prevent the increase of the salary of the Mexican secretary of legation. The Democrats were unable to produce a quorum and after the roll call the house adjourned.

The day in the senate was almost entirely consumed by a speech against the pending tariff bill by Senator Perkins of California. The speech was mainly devoted to a discussion of the articles which directly affected California, wool, fruits, quicksilver, beet sugar, etc., although he considered other features in the bill in which his state was not interested, but which was opposed to Republican principles, and which he accordingly arraigned.

Washington, April 21.—When the senate was called to order Senator Sherman, from the committee on foreign relations, reported a bill for the correction of an error in the Bering sea bill recently passed. By the substitution of the word "exclusive" for "inclusive," the intention of the act, he said, had been entirely changed. The bill was passed. The resolution introduced recently by Senator Allen calling on the secretary of the treasury for the amount of appropriations made and expended for the improvements of rivers and harbors from March 3, 1887 to date was passed. The Peffer resolution for the appointment of a reception committee for Coxey's army of the commonweal to be known in senate parlance as "the committee on communications," came up and received some very rough handling. It went over without action. The rest of the day was devoted to the tariff.

Practically no business was transacted in the house. Three small unimportant bills were passed and the rest of the day was spent in fruitless discussion of a bill to settle some Tennessee war claims against the government amounting to $22,000. It was finally ended when Mr. Euloe made the point of no quorum on a motion to recommit the bill.

Washington, April 23.—The tariff debate was resumed in the senate to-day. The Republicans intimate that they will continue to talk indefinitely. Senator Harris, upon being asked, said that no agreement had been reached for the continuance of the present agreement as to hours for debate, and he was not prepared to say what would be done in that respect when that stage of the consideration of the bill should be reached. "It will depend upon circumstances," he said, "whether we shall go on as at present. We possibly may during this week, but I should say not longer. We have already had the bill under consideration for three weeks, and its opponents have consumed the greater part of the time. They certainly should have had an opportunity to exhaust their long speeches, and if a disposition should be shown to continue to make them, I shall ask for an extension of the daily time for debate. We shall have to come to that soon if it becomes apparent that those who are unfriendly to the bill mean to adopt dilatory tactics. I think we shall begin by meeting earlier, and if that change does not suffice to exact sufficient progress we shall gradually extend the hours into the night, and then will begin a contest which must exhaust the senators and result in final action upon the bill."

The house resumed consideration of appropriation bills.

Washington, April 24. — During the morning session of the senate a bill was introduced by request of Senator Peffer "To dispose of the idle labor and discourage idle wealth in the District of Columbia," which was referred to the committee on the District of Columbia. He also sought to take up from the calendar his resolution for the appointment of a committee on communications—his "Coxey committee"—but the motion was lost—26 to 17. The house bill for the protection of the birds and animals in the Yellowstone National Park which was under consideration in the morning hour on last Saturday was again called up by Senator Carey, and after some amendments had been made, the bill was passed. The morning hour having expired the tariff bill was laid before the senate and Senator Washburn of Minnesota addressed the senate in opposition to the bill. Senator Washburn spoke three and a half hours, and at the conclusion of his speech Senator Dolph delivered another installment of his speech.

The house devoted the entire day to business from the committee on the District of Columbia.

KELLY ON THE MARCH

The Army on Its March toward Washington.

Omaha, April 21.—Gen. Kelly is all the good words hitherto said of him confessed to the readers and more. He displayed the rarest of judgment and fortitude when he declined to put his men on a train stolen at Council Bluffs—stolen by the engineers and firemen of the Union Pacific. It was a Union Pacific engine, with Union Pacific cars, on the Rock Island track. Gen. Kelly declined it because he said he had not yet broken any law and did not intend to start in here. There was great excitement here all day, and it was intensified at nightfall by the news that a train had been captured to relieve Kelly. Crowds thronged the streets and an immense open air meeting was held. Rumors of the calling out of federal troops, of state troops, of deaths in Kelly's camp, and reports of every conceivable nature kept the crowd on a tension hard to understand. But no disorder unusual ensued, and as if by a miracle the clash that seemed inevitable, was averted and Kelly's army slept at camp at Weston waiting for daybreak to march to Council Bluffs where a new start East will be made on foot.

Washington, April 21.—Representative Davis (Pop., Kan.) has introduced in the house a long bill reciting the woes of the unemployed and directing the secretary of war to immediately enlist "500,000 men in an industrial volunteer army to serve for the period of one year after enlistment." The army is to be fed and clothed and paid as regular soldiers. Instead of drilling, they are employed on public highways, etc. To defray the expenses of this army the secretary of the treasury is to issue $50,000,000 of legal tender notes and certain other form of currency. The bill specifies the following issues of money to pay the army: Fifty million dollars to replace the waste and destruction on notes under the act of 1878; $150,000,000 to replace national bank currency retired, $100,000,000 and annually thereafter to keep up the volume of money.

Neola, Iowa, April 23.—Kelly and his industrial army completed their first day's march from Council Bluffs here at 6 o'clock last evening, and immediately went into camp in a grove just east of town. The entry into Neola was a triumphal march. Almost every man, woman and child of the 1,100 inhabitants went out to greet the army. Flags were borne and cheers were lusty as the 800 men tramped down the street. The stores and vacant buildings of this place were thrown wide open and the weary men offered all available shelter. The start from Camp Weston was made at 8 o'clock. Hundreds of people had gone out from Council Bluffs and Omaha to see the beginning of the long overland march, and a dozen wagons heavily laden with provisions awaited the moving of the column. As soon as breakfast was over and blankets strapped the companies fell into line, and in step with the energetic trumping of a bass drummer tramped down the hill upon which the camp was situated, and the march to Washington was begun. The day was a perfect one, and rapid time was made along the smooth, well beaten roads. From every farm house flags were flying and at every cross roads lines of gaily decorated wagons and carriages awaited the coming of the army. The little town of Underwood was reached about noon and a sumptuous repast was served by the enthusiastic villagers. When the meal was over and the impromptu speeches done the march was resumed amid the energetic cheering of the crowd that was gathered. On every hand the deepest sympathy for Kelly and his men was expressed. Farmers and townsmen were eager to supply the wants of the commonwealers. Neola is with Kelly to a man, and the condemnation of the action of the railroads in refusing transportation is as violent here as at Council Bluffs and Omaha. As an ironical expression of the feeling regarding the calling out of the Iowa militia the citizens here formed a company of little boys and girls to greet the advent of the army, the badges and banners of the infantile brigade bearing the inscription: "Neola Militia." Throughout the day there was no scene of disturbance or disorder, and the plan of seizing a train has been abandoned. Gen. Kelly says whether the men ride or walk, they will move steadily forward for Des Moines. There the army expects to secure a train for Chicago, and at Chicago the men believe they will be provided with a train to the East.

Lieut. Maney Acquitted.

Chicago, April 23.—The jury in the case of Lieut. Manley, tried for the killing of Capt. Hadberg at Fort Sheridan, brought in a verdict of acquittal.

Neola, Iowa, April 24.—Kelly's industrial army awoke here to find itself in a state of mutiny. The young general promptly rose to the occasion, and before the march eastward was begun a colonel had been stripped of his rank and a company of fifty men dismissed from the service. After the excitement attending the incident had subsided Kelly marshaled his troops and the march to Avoca, eighteen miles away, was begun. The farmers of the surrounding country had provided about 100 wagons, and the greater part of the men were carried. One or two companies were compelled to go afoot. The men were vigorously cheered, and every mile or so farmers met the ranks with wagons loaded with provisions for the army.

Avoca, Iowa, April 24.—Kelly's reception here was fully as flattering as that which was accorded him at Neola. The 2,500 inhabitants were apparently all on the streets, and brawny countrymen and gaily decked maidens vied with each other in showering attentions upon the brigade. Many of the men had received new clothing along the route, and the army as it went into camp presented a much better appearance than at any previous time since the start from the far West. Company C, which had been disbanded at Neola, rejoined the army during the day, and after an abject apology from each member Kelly mustered them back "into the service." By this successful quelling of the little mutiny the determined young commander has secured an even more firm hold on his men and with them now is a court of last resort. Col. Baker, who was deposed by Kelly, announced that he would not return to the army, but will follow in its wake and give the people an expose of Kelly's financial methods. Baker charges gross irregularities. The people of Avoca place little confidence in Baker's statements. Many express the belief that Baker's contemplated action is the result of a railroad scheme to prejudice the public against the commonwealers, and this impression will go far toward discrediting Baker's stories.

FIGHT WITH WOMEN

DEPUTIES COMPELLED TO DEFEND THEMSELVES.

Women Near Uniontown, Pa., Attack a Posse of Deputy Sheriffs, and Several of the Amazons Are Rather Roughly Handled.

Uniontown, Pa., April 24.—The Oliver plant, near here, was the scene of disorder and bloodshed to-day. A striker named Michael Fotzke stoned the coke drawers while they were at work in the yard. Sheriff Wilhelm and a posse of deputies arrested him when about fifty women assembled and demanded his release. The others warned the women not to interfere. The answer was a yell of defiance, and then the whole crowd of cursing, swaggering women charged the squad of men attacking them with every conceivable missile and weapon except firearms. Blood was flowing from numbers of the men in a moment, and when some of them had been knocked down they were forced to fight back. Mrs. Fetzko, the leader of the forces, rushed at Deputy Sheriff Richards with an uplifted ax. He evaded the blow and knocked her senseless with his revolver butt. She lay stretched at length on the ground with blood gushing from a gash in her forehead. The cry was raised that she was killed, and the bedlam of savage excitement cannot be described. She was revived after fully twenty minutes. When she struck at Richards with the ax the other deputies threw off the restraint that had made them helpless against these women heretofore. Numbers of women were felled with blows from maces, others were stabbed with bayonets or beaten with the stocks of Winchesters, and the sheriff had great difficulty in preventing the men from shooting them down like dogs. The situation at Oliver is alarming.

oWmen Train Wreckers.

Wausau, Wis., April 24. — Attempted train wrecking is the unusual charge against two women under arrest here, and who will have a preliminary hearing to-morrow. A few days ago an attempt was made to derail a Northwestern train at Callon. Ties were placed across the rails at a dangerous point and a passenger train narrowly escaped striking the obstruction. Railway officials who were sent to investigate the case caused the arrest of Mrs. Augusta Thurston and Mrs. Louis Lehmann. The evidence against them is said by the detectives to be strong. The motive for the alleged offense is not known.

Chinamen Fail to Register.

San Francisco, April 24.—The registration of Chinese in San Francisco under the McCreary act has not been as active as was expected at the time of its passage, and it is estimated that from 4,000 to 7,000 as yet have filed no application to register. The Chinese claim that the time has been insufficient and the method of registration inadequate and have sent an appeal to Washington for more time. It is believed they will be satisfied with two more months.

New England's Contingent.

Dedham, Mass., April 24.—New England's contingent of the industrial army, 100 strong, spent the night in Memorial building in the town square, and early to-day took up the march for Norwood. They expect to reach Mansfield to-day. No excitement marked the start and no desertions discouraged the leaders. A half-dozen citizens joined the ranks as the army left town, some of whom claimed to be recruits.

125,000 Men Out.

Columbus, April 24. — The latest reports received by President McBride, of the United Mine Workers, show suspension of work by 8,000 men in Alabama, 5,000 in Tennessee and Kentucky, 2,000 in West Virginia, 5,000 in Indiana, 26,000 in Ohio, 24,000 in Illinois, 1,300 in Iowa, 2,000 in Indian Territory, 1,300 in Missouri, 50,000 in Pennsylvania, 300 in Michigan. Total, 125,900.

On Track of Incendiaries.

Duluth, Minn., April 24.—Sensational developments in regard to late suspicious fires in local retail stores are expected to become public within the next day or two. Insurance companies have for some time been making investigations, and, if reports are to be believed, have unearthed much of interest.

Dr. Pepper Retires.

Philadelphia, April 24. — Dr. Pepper has resigned from the position of provost of the University of Philadelphia. In retiring he made a contribution of $5,000 to the fund for the extension of the university hospital buildings.

Sunrise City's New Postmaster.

Washington, April 24. — Edmund D. Wilcox was to-day appointed postmaster at Sunrise City, Chisago county, Minn., vice William Ash, resigned. S. J. McKee was appointed at Elkhart, Polk county, Iowa.

A Receiver at Sibley.

Sibley, Iowa, April 24.—Reliable information has been received that Judge Gaynor has determined to appoint Kerr D. Dunlap as receiver of the Northwestern State Bank of Sibley.

Hayward Lumber Mill Resumes.

Hayward, Wis., April 24.—The big mill of the North Wisconsin Lumber company started yesterday with a small cut in wages. Many improvements were made in the mill during the winter.

Will Teach in Fergus Falls.

Red Wing, Minn., April 24. — Miss Catherine Comfort, assistant principal in the Red Wing high school, has accepted a similar position in Fergus Falls.

Flour Mills Shut Down.

West Superior, Wis., April 24.—Several of the large flouring mills have shut down on account of the Eastern bringing in but little wheat.

Washington Mills Burned.

Seattle, Wash., April 24.—The Fleming-Ayres shingle mill at Bothwell, on the Lake Shore road, was burned yesterday. Loss, 50,000.

This Settles It.

London, April 24.—It is officially announced to-day that the royal assent has been given to the Bering sea act.

Jerry Very Ill.

Washington, April 24.—The illness of Representative Simpson of Kansas has assumed an alarming phase.

It makes a man weary to read the daily papers in regard to the Great Northern strike, Every line shows that they have no time for the man who works for a living. All bend the knee to J. J. Hill's millions. All reports of the strike are colored to suit the railroad company. U. S. marshalls, paid by the government, of course, are running the trains and the poor devils who are striking for enough wages to live on are outlaws. The divil or the Great Northern, it matters not which—its gold that colors the report of the average metropolitan newspaper and the man who has none has no right to live, according to their moral code.

The Strike.

Very little change is noticed in the Great Northern strike since last week. Passenger trains are being run at intervals by U. S. Marshals but very little is being carried except the mail. The men seem terribly in earnest and claim that they will succeed. At present it looks like a long and bitter struggle unless the company accede to the demands of the men. The Great Northern offered to arbitrate, but the men afraid of a trap, refused, The trains here are running but no brakemen are seen. Conductors Scott and Ditty were up last Friday and Murry and Cooper Monday and today. The men have the sympathy of the public and the company are bound to get the worst of it in the end.

When talking about the hard times about low prices of farm products and labor, about shutting down of factories and the general stagnation of business it should always be remembered that with one exception, all the important affecting our industries which were passed by the republican party while in power, including the McKinley tariff law, are still on our statute books The exception noted is a part of the Sherman silver law and that was changed as much at the instance of the republican as democratic party. Grover Cleveland and John Sherman share about equally the credit for the repeal of the clause in that law providing for monthly purchases of silver. If laws or lack of laws have anything to do with the present condition what party is to blame?—Norman County Herald.

Let the farmers remember, when the old party county bosses come around and explain with a flourish that "over production" is the cause of low prices, that millions of consumers are out of work and that death by starvation has met many in the cities. Under a humane system of finance this multitude of unemployed would be consumers because they would be employed steady at good wages. The toilers of the cities are told that it is "over production;" that the farmers cannot consume what is manufactured. We believe that with $50 per capita in circulation and a consequent higher range of prices, the farmers of the country would become such buyers as to cause the manufacturing establishments to run nearly day and night to keep up with their orders. It is a money famine ine that is blighting the prosperity of the nation.—Missouri World.

Every sign points to the fact that we are living in perilous times, that we are on the eve of the greatest political revolution this country ever saw. Every daily paper that one takes up tells of riot and bloodshed, distress and woe. Lockouts, strikes boycotts—labor disturbances of all kinds, and yet for predicting this very state of affairs Republicans and Democrats a few years ago, called the Populists who made the predictions "calamity howlers." But today every Democratic and Republican paper in the land is a calamity howler of the howlingest kind. We all may hope and pray for good times. Dun and Bradstreet may keep on lying as they have been in crying good times, but until the gold power is put down to stay it will be all in vain. Hard times, calamities of every kind in the industrial world followed the demonetization of silver in 1873. It was ever thus. Let confidence be restored by placing silver back where it was before the crowning act of infamy that witnessed its demonetization in 1873, and the wheels of industry will again revolve even though every vestige of the tariff were knocked to the winds. We are entering darker days than those of the rebellion, and now is the time for every patriot to drop party and rally around the flag of the Union before this proud American republic disappears as republics before us have gone, only to be remembered on the pages of history, a sacrafice to the mighty power of gold.—Mankato Journal.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of five hundred and forty-seven dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John F. Fredrickson mortgagor, to Security Trust Company, of Nashua N. H. mortgagee, bearing date the 29th day of November 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on the 11th day of December 1890, at 10:50 o'clock a. m., in Book 50 of mortgages, on page 101 and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage viz:

Study Necessary to Successful Dairying.

In an address before the students of the school of agriculture, Ohio State university, ex-Gov. Hoard said: "I want to say something along the line of study in dairy work.

"In the first place I want to speak of the importance of special training in dealing with the forces marshaled before us. We have first to understand the subject of maternity, the life which lies in the cow. We depend on maternity—the function of milk-giving is a maternal function. The laws that control it are the laws of maternity and the man who has to do with it needs to study the laws of maternity. He needs to study the treatment that is successful with maternity and invariably he takes the man of science for his guidance. If he is successful he needs to study it in its every action.

"He can only promote the flow of the lacteal if he provides for the comfort of the cow. Anything that disturbs the cow, or anything that produces nervousness in her, takes away the flow and restricts the milk-giving, and as a natural consequence touches the man's pocket nerve. I want to make this lecture intensely selfish but wisely so. I want it to be practical. I want you to see the profit in doing this.

"Now he must understand that he has based his whole work on this question of maternity and he needs his best study along this line. He can study the laws which govern it, he can study other forms of life and then he will be fitted to study this question of maternity. He must understand that it means first warmth. If he is shrewd he will see that that mother is insured a sufficient degree of warmth to secure a flow of the lacteals.

"Then there is a constant need of his best study along the line of the production of food for the cow on the farm. There are to-day fortunes awaiting farmers if they would study how to produce the finer kinds of food for the cow on the farm. It is settled that the cow must be fed and the question of the kind of food is an important one.

"Milk is a perfectly balanced compound, and therefore, she must have a balanced compound food. The man is a fool who supposes he can feed for butter fat alone, for in feeding, he must feed a balanced ration to secure a balanced compound. I want you to think about this, and I want you to hunt for the reasons.

"I wish the farmers all over our land could appreciate the wonderful contributions to knowledge that have been made by students. I do not mean scholars. A student is one who never gets done learning, but a scholar is one who has graduated and can learn nothing more.

"The commercial problem of to-day is how to reduce the cost of production. The other end of this problem is out of your reach, but the cost end of the problem is with you and you can do something with it. To do this you must study how to reduce the cost of production. Study how to produce protein and fat. These can be produced in some form or other on the farm which will reduce the cost of production."

A Queer Burglar Trap.

"I went, one night," said the retired burglar, "into the room of a man who had his clothes stacked up on a chair alongside the bed, with the trousers thrown on top in a careless sort of way, as though he had been too tired or too lazy to straighten 'em out. The right-hand pocket looked inviting, and I reached into it. There was a pocketbook there, but when I tried to pull it out my hand was held on the sharp points of a dozen wires.

"You have seen those mouse traps with little cone-shaped wire tunnels for the mouse to run his head into? He can get his head in easily enough, but when he wants to pull it out the ends of the wires stick into his head and neck and hold him. Well, this man had fixed up a contrivance like that in his pocket. I could have freed myself by taking a little time and using a little more patience, but I said to myself, "Why not carry the trousers off and take my time about it?" I gathered them up and started. It was a mistake. I hadn't got six feet before I felt a tug, and the points were pulled into my hand deeper than ever. Of course I knew at once what it all meant; there was a cord attached to one of the trousers legs and the other end of it was tied to the man's hand, and that was what I had brought up against.

"He was out of bed in a minute. I made a bluff at him, but, hampered as I was with practically only one hand, I really wasn't in it at all, and in less than two minutes he had me tied up waiting for the police.—New York Sun.

PUZZLE FOR ANTIQUARIANS.

Relics of a Race Who Lived on an Island Off the French Coast.

A lady whose home is in the south of France writes to Goldthwaite's Magazine of a visit she made recently to an island on the coast of Brittany. Those who have read the story of King Arthur and his knights will remember that they started out over the sea in pursuit of the dragon. In this, the Marbihan sea, is a little island which can be reached from the mainland only when the water is smooth. The sole inhabitant is a Breton shepherd, who lives in a little hut and spends his time in caring for his sheep. The party landed and were met by this kind-faced old man, who led them over the grassy slope where his flock was feeding, and showed them the way around a hill, on the east side of which they found the entrance to a tunnel. This extended some distance, and its floor, sides and roof were made of immense flat pieces of stone, covered with hieroglyphs and figures "looking somewhat like wreathes and again like coiled serpents." At the end of this tunnel was a hall, also floored, roofed and walled with the same curious stones, and in the center was an altar and a stone upon which it is thought that human sacrifices have been offered. The strangest part of all is that no stones or rocks like those used in this tunnel can be found on the island, and at no place nearer than 100 miles inland. Who brought them? How did they come? There is no record left—at least none has been found—to tell who these people were, or anything about them. They must have lived many centuries ago, but have vanished entirely, yet their work is as perfect apparently as when first built. It is thought that they may have been Druids, who came here when they left Great Britain; others, again, think that they were worshipers of the serpent god called Hoa. But it is conjecture. All we know is that the stones are there, strangely carved, skillfully put together, but of their builders there is no trace.

Their Visits to the Avuncular Relative Become a Matter of Habit Sometimes.

"Pawnbroking is a habit," said a man who sits under the shadow of the three balls, to a writer for the Buffalo Express. "Yes, mostly a habit. The patent medicine habit is nothing to it. After anybody has hung up something with me a few times he's pretty sure to become a regular customer. He does business with me just like clock work after that; always goes broke just so long before pay day. Two of the best people I have are husband and wife, and neither knows that the other ever heard of such a thing as hocking a watch. I know that from the way they acted, and I was pretty much surprised one day when the woman brought in the pawn ticket for her husband's watch. She didn't look as if anything unusual had happened, and I sized up the situation and gave her her own watch instead. That was what she wanted. Next day the husband came in with the ticket for his wife's watch. I gave him his own watch and he never knew the difference. You see, they had hidden their tickets in the same place. They have brought their watches around ever since, which they wouldn't have done by any manner of means if I hadn't had my wits about me. Now, one of those church pawnbrokers down in New York wouldn't have known enough to do that, and would have lost two good customers as well as made trouble in an estimable family. It takes brains to run my business."

Inhaling Mint in Consumption.

Carasso director of the military hospital at Genoa, reports a number of successful cases in the treatment of pulmonary tuberculosis by inhalations of mint essence. The results were good, not only in the early stages, but even after large cavities had formed and when the sputa were loaded with bacilli. Fever, when present, disappeared in a few days, the cough and expectoration were notably diminished, the night sweats ceased and the bodily weight increased. The bacilli disappeared entirely from the sputum in periods varying in the different cases from two weeks to two months. The physical signs in the lungs also improved and became perfectly normal in several instances, in which no destruction of tissue had taken place. Just how much of this amelioration should be attributed to the inhalations of mint is, however, uncertain, for the patients were subjected to a system of forced feeding and to the internal administration of creosote.—Medical Record.

JACK RABBITS IN A FIGHT.

The Fur Flew in Reality and Both of the Combatants Died.

A San Francisco man recently received two consignments of jack rabbits from the country. They were to be used for coursing purposes, but having come from different localities the two tribes were continually at war. An observer, in telling a reporter for the Call about one battle royal said:

"We were chatting over the prospects of next day's coursing and commenting on the weather, when a 'jack' was seen crossing the field in the direction of the escape with another 'jack' in hot pursuit. At first I thought some stray dog had got into the field at the south end and was driving the hares toward the breeding paddock. Suddenly hare No. 1 turned in its track and dashed at its pursuer. They telescoped, so to speak, and then the fight was on. You should have been there to see the fur fly. There was no fake about this match; it was for blood and fur. The rabbits rolled into the mud after the first charge, and after they regained their pins they rose quickly on their hind feet and slashed at each other with their front paws in a manner that would have made champions of the prize ring feel as if they were as slow as a snail in their movements. I positively never have seen such fierce fighting. At each stroke the fur would be seen to fly in bunches, and the blows, if they can be termed as such, were fast and furious. After a minute's contest the pursued hare made an effort to run, but it was so badly crippled that it lost its equilibrium and fell in the slush, where it received still further punishment from its opponent. We thought that the jig was up with No. 1, and moved slowly toward the spot where the conflict had taken place. When within fifty yards of the fighting quadrupeds the hare we supposed was dead or dying leaped to his feet and fought more viciously than ever. The contest did not continue much longer, as the hare which had challenged its opponent fell back as if hit with leaden pellets and lay apparently dead on the field of battle. After driving the successful competitor away and picking up the prostrate animal we found that both of its eyes were completely destroyed and its face horribly lacerated. We easily captured the 'conquering hero' and had the two little pugilists cared for as well as circumstances would permit, but they were too severely punished to survive their wounds, and that evening the proprietor of the park found himself minus two of his 'imported fiyers'—they had kicked the bucket."

Biblical Quotations.

A collection was lifted in a Boston Sunday school for a foreign mission, and the pupils of one class were asked to repeat a verse from the bible appropriate to the occassion. The first boy said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." "Good!" cried all. And then they went on: "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver;" "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord," and so on. One boy staggered the teacher a bit by quoting: "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak;" but a certain amount of appropriateness was recognized. "Give the devil his due" lengthened some faces when the next boy blurted it out, but the climax was reached and the quotations ended when another boy shouted: "A fool and his money are soon parted."—Boston Traveller.

WITS AT WORK.

Clara—Don't you think he is too old to love? Maude—That may be, my dear, but he's too wealthy not to.

Traveler—I see you advertise shelter for man and beast? Tavernkeeper—Yes, sir; I can give you either. Which do you prefer?

Dozeleigh—Why do you insist upon the new pastor being a fat man? Deacon Broadaisle—Because fat men are generally short-winded.

Figg—What does this paper mean when it speaks of the timbre of Solfa's voice? Fogg—That's a polite way of saying that his singing is wooden.

Maud—Why don't you give young Sewers some encouragement if you love him? Nell—Oh, he ought to be able to press his own suit. He's a tailor.

Aunty—What a lot of pretty dolls you have. Little Niece—Yes'm, they is real pretty; but I do have so much trouble wiz zem. Sometimes I fink they must be all boys.

Prisoner—It's hard to charge me with forgery, for you see I can't even sign my own name. Judge—That point is immaterial; it's another man's name you're accused of signing.

"Jimmie Smith is awful deceitful." "In what way?" "Well, sometimes he washes his face twice a week." "What has that to do with it?" "Well, the teacher thinks he's sick an' lets him go home."

"Brinkles says you owe him $10," said the man who has no that whatever. "That's very true," was the reply. "I'd have paid it long ago, only I was afraid of hurting his feelings." "What do you mean?" "I was afraid he would think I thought he needed the money."

Company had unexpectedly "dropped in" to dinner at the home of the small boy who was fond of pie. His mother, not having an ample quantity, diminished the generous slice he usually received. But he objected and, pushing his plate aside, said: "I ain't going to take that piece of pie; it's too long and slim and thin and not a bit wide and hardly any thick."

A MIRACLE OF TO-DAY

A STORY THAT EQUALS THE MIRACLES OF OLD.

A Little Girl Suffers Terrible Agony for Years—Physicians Said She Would Die—Cured at Last—Her Mother Says It Is a Miracle.

The following story needs no comment whatever. It is the town talk in Wrentham, Mass., and the child's mother tells it as follows. Mrs. Fuller said: "My daughter is now eight years old. When she was four years old she had rheumatic fever, and at once she was stricken helpless; she went from bad to worse until we all despaired of ever seeing her about again. I employed at various times physicians of Foxboro, Franklin and Attleboro, but all to no practical benefit. I gave her all sorts of medicines, and this spring I buried over two bushels of empty bottles which she had emptied from time to time. One doctor who attended her said that she had liver complaint and dropsy, and that she was going to die. I had given up all hope myself when last March I happened to get hold of an Albany, N. Y., paper, and there I read of the wonderful cure of a man up that way by a medicine known as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, the patient having been afflicted as my daughter was. At that time her legs were drawn up behind her, and her arms were almost helpless. Her head was drawn down on her shoulder and she was a pitiful sight, I tell you.

"I sent and got two boxes of Pink Pills, and when she had used them up I thought I could see just a bit of improvement. Then I got two more and she began to lift herself in bed, and to help herself in other ways. She kept on taking the pills, and now she is able to go over to the neighbors, and is bright and smart. She was a living skeleton; there was nothing to her but bones, and they were all out of shape. When she was first taken sick she was out of her head, and for three years, if you will believe me, it was an utter impossibility for me to catch more than five minutes' sleep at a time, so much care was she, and such constant attention did she require, and I was the only one she would let wait upon her. But I am glad I did so, and now I am getting my reward," and the fond, patient, faithful little woman glanced with pride and pleasure to the spot where the little girl was playing with her sister in the shade, just outside the window. "I have spent more than $500 on her, and although I never begrudged it yet I did want to see my child improve faster than she did. To-day she eats more at one meal than I do in two. When I commenced to give her the Pink Pills she was afflicted with a skin disease which was very annoying. Now that has all gone, and I think the pills are responsible for that. Before I started on the Pink Pills I wrote to a specialist in Buffalo, and described her symptoms; he said she had blood poisoning, due to bad milk, and wanted me to bring her there for treatment, although he said that he didn't believe she would ever get over it. She had been given up by four doctors, who were certain that they could not cure her. Why, she couldn't open her mouth, and I actually had to force the food into it. Her mouth was all sores, and, oh, dear, what a looking child she was, and such a care! Nobody but myself knows what a trial we have both been through, for she was too young to realize it. If my statement will do anybody any good I shall be glad to have it published, and if those who read it will only come to me, if they are skeptical, I can convince them in very little time that I know what I am talking about. People around here say it was a miracle, and I believe it was."

The neighbors bore witness to the condition of the child previous to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and were enthusiastic in their praises of the splendid work which has been accomplished by them in this case.

Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, (50 cents a box or 6 boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., or Brockville, Ontario.—From the Taunton, Mass., Gazette.

Heavy.

There are ways and ways of estimating literature, and perhaps in the days of the regulation three-volume novel the following method was as good as any. Harper's Drawer contains the following illustration of a critical rule not usually applied:

Dr. S. was passing a small grocery shop when he saw some ripe peaches, and stepped in to buy. The proprietor answered him in a very preoccupied manner, for he was looking at some books when his customer entered.

"I've been buying some books," he suddenly announced.

"Have you?"

"Yes; I've bought all of Duemasses."

"Dumas, you mean!"

"Well, any way will do. Did you ever read any of them? Are they good?"

"Yes. Some of them are a little heavy, though."

"Heavy!" retorted the grocer. "I don't know about that," he added, placing the complete writings of Dumas on the grocery scales, and weighing them. "They tip the scales at twenty-two pounds. At any rate, I don't think I paid very high for them. They only cost me $12. That's less than 50 cents a pound!"

Black Sheets.

The fad of a few years ago for silk sheets, pillow slips, nightgowns and body garments was short lived. Black sheets gave a few New York women dubious newspaper fame. Dealers who ordered supplies lost on the sales and after a year's trial silk robes were pronounced unsalable. Now, saleswomen declare that the best people will have nothing to do with silk underwear—that is, in piece goods, excepting two garments, petticoats and corsets. Linen sheets and percale, nainsook, batiste or linen lawn underwear are preferred. The demand for pure silk, spun silk, camel's hair and silk and wool woven garments is, however, steadily increasing.

Disastrous.

"It never pays to bet with a woman," said the young man with a sad face.

"Why; isn't she good pay, as a rule?"

"Oh, yes. She always insists on paying. And then she goes away and hates you for life."—Washington Star.

"One Shoe Off, and One Shoe On."

A company of idlers on a hotel piazza, says the San Francisco Call, were telling such yarns as are commonly spun in such places, when one of them offered to wager that he had done something as a boy in Tennessee, that no other member of the party had ever done or heard of.

"What was it, colonel?" asked one of the crew.

"I wore out my first pair of shoes without ever having them both on at once."

"Explain."

"Well, you see, it was this way. The shoemaker was slow, and I was in a hurry. A boy who has never had a pair of shoes finds it hard to wait. Come Saturday night the man had one of them done, but told me I should have to wait a week for the other.

"'Well give me that one, anyhow,' said I, and I carried it home. I wore it all that week, and all the next, for the fellow didn't keep his word any more than shoemakers generally do; and by the time the second one was done the first one needed repairing.

"And so the thing went on. That shoemaker was so slow and the leather was so poor and I ran about so much that somehow I never once had both shoes on together, and by and by they were gone entirely."

Gold Digging.

Perhaps it was not an old "Forty-niner" who gave the following description, but it was a man who knew the work in question. Like most enthusiasts, however, he underrates the trial and disappointment involved.

It's the prettiest work I ever did. It's the fascination of it; when you've struck it pretty rich and see your gold right in front of you, when you're piling it up every half hour of the day, with a nugget now and again as big as a bullet to cheer you.

And then when the evening comes and you count it up and find it a hundred odd dollars, just picked out o' the earth that day, well, there's nothing like it!

Then, when you don't strike it, you always think you're going to next day; and it's just as exciting hearing other men tell in the evening what they've pulled out, as it is counting your own. Why, I've been three months at a time without making a dollar and without a cent in my pocket, but, gee-whittaker! the excitement of it don't give a man time to think how hard up he is!

Her Sister.

When Lady Waterford died in 1891, the sorrow at her loss was very deep and general. Her life had been one of love and service, and one instance especially which followed her death shows the spirit in which she gave to the world.

When her effects were distributed, one man earnestly begged for her old seal skin jacket. He urged his request with the utmost warmth, and declared that he should cherish it all his life. Then he told the story connected with it in his mind.

One day he had been walking by my lady's donkey-chair, when they found a tramp, a woman, lying in the ditch, very ill indeed. Lady Waterford got out of her chair, and made the man help her lift the poor old woman into it. Then she took off her own jacket, put it on the sick woman, and walked home by the side of the chair, tending and comforting her all the way.

"But it was not my lady's putting her jacket on the woman that I cared about," said the man, "but that she didn't think it was harmed by having the tramp wear it. She wore it herself afterward as if nothing had happened."

The subject of the above portrait is a prominent and much respected citizen, Mr. Robert Manson, of West Rye, N. H. Where Mr. Manson is known "his word is as good as his bond." In a recent letter to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., Mr. Manson says:

"Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the best pills I ever took for the liver. All my friends say they do them the most good."

This opinion is shared by every one who once tries these tiny, little, sugar-coated pills, which are to be found in all medicine stores. The U. S. Inspector of Immigration at Buffalo, N. Y., writes of them as follows:

"From early childhood I have suffered from a sluggish liver, with all the disorders accompanying such a condition. Doctors' prescriptions and patent medicines I have used in abundance; they only afforded temporary relief. I was recommended to try Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. I did so, taking two at night and one after dinner every day for two weeks. I have reduced the dose to one 'Pellet' every day for two months. I have in six months increased in solid flesh twenty-two pounds. I am in better health than I have been since childhood. Drowsiness and unpleasant feelings after meals have completely disappeared."

John H. M. Barry

Assist nature a little now and then with a gentle laxative, or, if need be, with a more searching and cleansing cathartic, thereby removing offending matter from the stomach and bowels, and toning up and invigorating the liver and quickening its tardy action, and you thereby remove the cause of a multitude of distressing diseases, such as headaches, indigestion, biliousness, pimples, boils, carbuncles, piles, fevers and maladies too numerous to mention.

If people would pay more attention to properly regulating the action of their bowels, they would have less frequent occasion to call for their doctors' services to subdue attacks of dangerous diseases.

That, of all known agents to accomplish this purpose, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are unequaled, is proven by the fact that once used, they are always in favor. Their secondary effect is to keep the bowels open and regular, not to further constipate, as is the case with other pills. Hence, their great popularity with sufferers from habitual constipation, piles, and indigestion.

The "Pleasant Pellets" are far more effective in arousing the liver to action than "blue pills," calomel, or other mercurial preparations, and have the further merit of being purely vegetable and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system; no particular care is required whilst using them.

Composed of the choicest, concentrated vegetable extracts, their cost is much more than is that of other pills found in the market, yet from forty to forty-four "Pellets" are put up in each sealed glass vial, as sold through druggists, and can be had at the price of the more ordinary and cheaper made pills.

Dr. Pierce prides himself on having been first to introduce a Little Liver Pill to the American people. Many have imitated them, but none have approached his "Pleasant Pellets" in excellence.

For all laxative and cathartic purposes the "Pleasant Pellets" are infinitely superior to all "mineral waters," sedlitz powders, "salts," castor oil, fruit syrups (so-called), laxative "teas," and the many other purgative compounds sold in various forms.

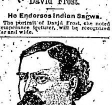
Put up in glass vials, sealed, therefore always fresh and reliable. One little "Pellet" is laxative, two gently cathartic.

As a "dinner pill," to promote digestion, take one each day after dinner. To relieve distress from over-eating, nothing equals them. They are tiny, sugar-coated, anti-bilious granules, scarcely larger than mustard seeds. Every child wants them.

Then, after they are taken, instead of disturbing and shocking the system, they act in a mild and natural way. There is no reaction afterward. They help Nature.

Accept no substitute recommended to be "just as good." They may be better for the dealer, because of paying him a better profit, but he is not the one who needs help.

NOTED TEMPERANCE LEADER
The Forcible and Brilliant David Frost.
He Endorses Indian Sagwa.
The portrait of David Frost, the noted temperance lecturer, will be recognized far and wide.



DAVID FROST, BOSTON, MASS.

In a recent conversation with Mr. Frost, that gentleman said, with the convincing earnestness which characterizes his remarks: "One of the greatest evils with which the friends of temperance have to contend is the cheap whiskey decoctions and miserable rum mixtures by which the market is flooded under the guise of 'Bitters,' 'Sarsaparillas,' 'Gingers,' and other patent medicines.
"I do not mean to say," continued Mr. Frost, "that all proprietary medicines come under this head, and in fact I know from personal experience of one which is not only a Great Medicine, a Splendid Tonic, and Unrivalled Blood Purifier, but which is innocent of all deteriorating ingredients and Free from Harmful Effects, no matter how much or how freely it may be used. It is not my wish to appear as the exponent of any public remedy, but in this case I deem it my duty to commend that Grand Remedy of the Indian race, Kickapoo Indian Sagwa.
"I speak from experience, for it has stood me in good stead. When half sick, worn out, and my most rebellious stomach refused to longer act in its normal capacity, 'Kickapoo Indian Sagwa' has restored me to a healthy condition when nothing else would. I have taken occasion also to learn something about this medicine and its origin, and know that 'Sagwa' is not only an old and tried remedy among the Indians, but that its Vegetable Purity and Harmless Curative Effects are still maintained, and that its manufacture is still carried on by modern methods exactly in accordance with the ways of the noble Red Man.
"Simple Roots, Barks, Leaves and Flowers from the Forest are all that enter into its composition, and the Strength which is gained from its use is not the false strength of the rum bottle but the Noble Exhilaration of Bounding Health, and the Purified Blood, cleansed of its poison, coursing through every Vein and Artery of the Human System."
Words fail to convey the earnest force of his remarks as expressed to the writer and the high regard he had for the remedy.

THE GREAT STRIKE.

MR. HILL AND THE STRIKERS AS FAR APART AS EVER.

The President of the Great Northern Declines an Offer to Hold a Public Conference, and Says He Intends to Operate His Road.

St. Paul, April 27.—It is war to the knife and knife to the hilt. This is now the state of affairs as regards the Great Northern strike. The men have notified Mr. Hill that they will hold no further conference and that they refuse to arbitrate. They demand the restoration of the old schedule and will accept nothing else. This means that the strike will be fought out on its merits, and that one side or the other will be defeated in the end.

When President Hill received a letter from the men representing the strikers announcing their determination he immediately began preparations to operate the road. A freight train was made up in the yards in St. Paul and manned by a full crew and guarded by a number of deputies the train started on its journey toward the coast. It is almost certain that there will be serious trouble before the train gets through, or even before it gets out of Minnesota. The strikers along the line are determined that nothing but mail trains shall run until their demands are complied with, and many of them are in a mood that means bloodshed if necessary to carry their point.

It is not known just what action will be taken by the strike leaders. They say that they do not contemplate calling the men out in St. Paul and Minneapolis, but it is thought that a strike will be declared in the Twin Cities within a day or two. President Debs, of the A. R. U., is suffering with fever, and is confined to his room in the hotel. Vice President Howard has charge of the strike.

Helena, Mont., April 27.—News of the ultimatum of President Hill, of the Great Northern, was to a certain extent a surprise to the strikers in this city. The men had an idea that the conference would last several days, and that in the end Hill would grant the demands. It is generally conceded that the greatest struggle between railroad men and the railroad will be on the Montana Central from Great Falls to Butte. Director Hogan, of the strikers, who organized the strike on the Great Northern, and who is practically the general in command, after receiving Hill's offer for the men to return to work, the matter of the schedules to be taken up later, and all disputed points to be referred to a board of arbitration, their finding to be final, gave the following to the press:

"Mr. Hill should understand by this time that the conditions under which the men will return to work are that the company restore all wages and schedules in existence prior to the first cut made in 1893. There can be no departure from this, the original proposition, which was submitted to General Manager Case April 13."

St. Paul, April 28.—The Great Northern strike has gone into effect at St. Paul and Minneapolis and at all points on the line from this city to the coast. Within five minutes after the committee had arrived at the decision to call all the men out the order had been sent out by President Debs, and the fight is now on in dead earnest. The company claims that it has sufficient men now in its service who will remain at work, while the American Railway union assert just the contrary.

President Debs was seen by a reporter just after the committee adjourned, and when asked what was the situation, he replied:

Everything is at a standstill in the Great Northern yards in this city, and the men have almost unanimously obeyed the order to strike. Three trains were stalled in the yards at the Jackson street crossing. Two of these were freight trains, respectively, of the Omaha and Burlington roads on their way to the Minnesota transfer, but unable to proceed on account of the yard switchmen being out with the strikers, and the passenger train of the Eastern Minnesota railroad, which is part of the Great Northern system, was also standing at the same point and the engineer and fireman had deserted their engine. The conductor was standing beside the train but refused to talk. The train left the depot at 1:05 on its way to Duluth, its crew having not evidently heard of the order to go out until they reached the yards. The train was there deserted by all of its crew except the conductor, and the baggageman and brakemen returned to the city. The train is occupied by quite a number of passengers and is made up of the ordinary passenger and Pullman coaches, mail car, baggage and express car. It was not the intention of the committee that the strike should apply at once to the Eastern Minnesota, but the employes of that road are apparently determined not to be behind their comrades on the other lines.

It appears now that unless the strikers of the Great Northern become riotous and commit depredations other than interfering with the running of trains state troops will not be called out. In calling on the United States authorities for protection and placing the trains in the care of United States marshals, the state authorities appear to believe that the Great Northern management has placed the matter in the hands of the federal government, and if the marshals are not able to cope with the strikers the United States troops will be called to their assistance. It is stated that the Third infantry at Fort Snelling is being held in readiness to move at a moment's notice to any point where there may be trouble. Gen. Bend called at the capitol this morning, but found that nothing new regarding the strike had been reported there. All the officials had heard was a vague rumor that the Great Northern freight train sent out yesterday afternoon had been stopped and discontinued at St. Cloud. No reports of trouble had reached the governor's or any of the other offices. There was no trouble at St. Cloud. The train was abandoned owing to the fact that the road could not secure men.

President Hill was called on immediately after the order for a general strike had been promulgated, and stated that he had very little additional to say other than what had already been given out. The company, he said, proposed to operate its road independent of the American Railway union.

"I do not think," said Mr. Hill, "that any great proportion of the men will obey the order, and I do not anticipate any difficulty in getting men to operate the trains. I intend that every wheel on the line shall be running in as short a time as possible, and this latest move of the committee does not seriously alter the situation so far as the company is concerned."

Judge Sanborn has made his injunction permanent.

St. Paul, April 30.—Arbitration has been rejected by the Great Northern strikers, and the indications are that it will be a fight to a finish. Late Saturday afternoon work was sent to Secretary Byron, of the Commercial Club of Minneapolis, that the chamber of commerce, board of trade, Commercial club and kindred organizations of St. Paul were considering action whereby they might furnish expression to the belief that a conference of arbitration would satisfactorily settle all questions now in dispute between the Great Northern road and its employes, and asking him if he would see what could be done in Minneapolis toward the appointment of men to constitute a committee to attempt such arbitration. Secretary Forbes, of the Business Men's union, received a similar message, and plans were immediately taken under advisement, and it was decided that the action ought to be taken at once.

At 5 o'clock the Commercial club directors held a meeting and decided to take the initiative in arranging such a conference of business interests. About 125 representative business men of the city met in the quarters of the Commercial club, F. G. Winston being appointed chairman, F. R. Hubachek, secretary. The meeting was called to order by Mayor Eustis, who referred to the desirability of an immediate settlement of the trouble on the Great Northern. Vice President Hodgson, of the St. Paul Commercial club, explained the action which had been suggested at St. Paul and urged that similar action be taken in Minneapolis. Mr. Debs was called in and agreed to a resolution which provides for the appointment of an arbitration committee of five, one member to be appointed by the strikers, one by Mr. Hill and three by the state supreme court. Later President Hill agreed to the plan and it looked as though the strike would be settled, but yesterday the strikers' committee refused to accept the proposition and so informed Mr. Hill. At a mass meeting of the men the suggestion of arbitration was hissed.

The Great Northern restored the wages of the engineers and firemen to the old schedule and they will return to work. The men on the Eastern Minnesota have struck. Yesterday morning 300 regular troops left on a special train for Devils Lake to assist the United States marshal in making arrests.

When interviewed regarding the restoration of wages, President Debs said that if the wages of the shopmen, track hands and other minor employes are restored he would call off the strike, whether or not the American Railway union was recognized by the road.

"The new schedules were not accepted by the engineers or firemen," he said, "yet the Great Northern apparently had no trouble in enforcing it. The organization can, of course, make whatever arrangements they see fit, but the strike will not be called off until the road has settled with all of its employes."

President Debs did not apparently attach any importance to the restoration of the schedules for engineers and firemen, except that he considered it a sign of weakening on the part of Mr. Hill.

St. Paul, May 1.—A meeting of the Minneapolis and St. Paul citizens' committee was held at the Minneapolis Commercial club. The committee from Minneapolis was composed of C. A. Pillsbury, B. F. Nelson, W. S. Benton, J. T. Wyman, F. G. Winston and F. R. Hubachek. The St. Paul committee consisted of D. H. Moon, P. H. Kelly, Richard Gordon, George R. Finch, C. W. Hackett and Channing C. Seabury. This undeniably representative body met President Debs and Vice President Howard, of the A. R. U., for the avowed purpose of finding out the exact position of the men and to devise means for settling the difficulty as quickly as possible. The men made the proposition that the executive committee of the strikers would be willing to argue the matter with President Hill at any public mass meeting in the Twin Cities and then let the public hear for itself the different sides of the question directly from the lips of the men most vitally interested. As to submitting the question to any other form of arbitration, however, the representatives of the strikers stand firm against it. The committee waited upon Mr. Hill, who declared that it was no proposition looking to arbitration, and declared that he would not consider it. He declared that he intended to operate his road regardless of the men.

Grand Forks, N. D., May 1.—The special train bearing the First battalion and Third United States infantry from Fort Snelling reached here at 2 o'clock this morning, remained on a siding until daylight, then went into camp half a mile east of the depot. The troops will operate from Grand Forks and send detachments to Devils Lake and other points as often as they may be needed. Marshal Cronan, whose exploits during the week have made him famous, met the train on its arrival and immediately consulted with Maj. Patterson, in command of the battalion, and his brother officers. Marshal Cronan reported the men as quiet at Devils Lake, but ready to break out the instant the company attempted to operate any trains. There are 300 men at Devils Lake and they are in a desperate mood, doing much talking and making threats to tear up the tracks.

Chicago, May 1. — United States marshals were being recruited in Chicago to-day for duty along the line of the Great Northern. Over 300 were enrolled before noon, and a couple hundred more will be signed. The recruiting station is at 907 Temple building. Each man was asked his age, whether sober, married, etc., and if he could handle a rifle. They were promised $2.50 a day from time of enlistment until returned to Chicago. "Your services may be needed two weeks or six months," said the recruiting agent. Three hundred of the men were to leave by special train over the Milwaukee & St. Paul to-night. On arriving at St. Paul they will be sworn in by United States marshals of Montana and Dakota and placed on duty in those states. The Thiele Detective agency is said to be doing the recruiting. The Minnesota law prevents residents of other states from acting as police officers in that state, but this will not apply, as the men are sworn in as United States officers.

Idaho Town Destroyed.

Boise, Idaho, May 1.—Word was received that a fire destroyed a large portion of the town of Challis, in Custer county, on the 25th. The fire originated in the Challis hotel.

MAY HAVE TROUBLE

COXEY'S MEN WILL PARADE IN WASHINGTON.

The Chief of Police Declares That if They Attempt to Enter the Capitol Grounds They Will Be Arrested—Kelly Still at Des Moines.

Forsythe, Mont., April 27.—The Coxey men who stole a Northern Pacific train will be taken to Helena for trial. There are 331 men in the party, and two companies of United States troops will act as a guard for the marshal. The men are still here as prisoners of war, but will be taken to Helena on a special train this evening or to-morrow. After the capture Capt. Hogan, Conductor Wiley and Engineer Cleveland were put in a box car by themselves. When two sections of the passenger train came in from the West both conductors reported large numbers of Coxey recruits who refused to either get off or pay fare, and the military promptly took charge of nearly a hundred more. Before the railroad officials left Miles City last night they had warrants issued by Justice Gibb for the arrest of Capt. Hogan, Lieut. Pat Meaney, Conductors Smith and Wiley, Engineers Olney and Cleveland and ten others, charged with grand larceny in stealing a car of tools and a car of coal. A further charge of burglary will probably be lodged against some of the ring leaders.

Troutdale, Or., April 27.—The industrial army from Portland will undoubtedly make an attempt to take a train to-day, but the railroad company is determined not to carry them. A car load of special officers passed through ahead of the last freight train to circumvent any move the industrials might make.

Helena, Mont., April 28.—That part of Hogan's contingent of the Coxey army captured by Col. Page, numbering 330 men, is still held at Forsythe under guard of the soldiers. Col. Page early reported the capture to Washington and asked instructions as to further proceedings. It was understood by him that the prisoners would be turned over to the United States marshal, but it is now understood that only the leaders will be brought to Helena to answer to the charge of contempt of the United States district court in defying the injunction forbidding them from interfering with the Northern Pacific property. They will probably be brought here within a week, as soon as the excitement has died out, and the rank and file will be turned loose in detachments. The state militia, which has been under orders for three days, has been dismissed from further duty. Under no circumstances will the state assist in bringing the Coxeyites to Helena. They are now in the possession of federal authorities, and the governor will look to them to take care of them.

Stuart, Iowa, April 28.—Gen. Kelly announces that he will make a forced march of forty-one miles to Des Moines to-day, and that he intends to be there Sunday. The army cannot reach the state capital before 3 or 4 o'clock Sunday morning, and it is probable that the twenty-hour march will leave many of them by the wayside. The industrials presented a solid front when they marched into Stewart at 6 o'clock last night, but not more than 800 men were in the column which followed Kelly's prancing black charger. The remaining 400 came straggling in for hours on foot, wagons, the railroad track and on the wagon road.

Seattle, Wash., April 28.—A battalion of militia was called out here at midnight. Ninety men responded to the call within forty-five minutes, but most of them were dismissed and told to await orders. Col. Green denies that there was any other motive than an emergency call to test their availability, but he, with six orderlies, kept watch at the armory during the night. It is known that the Northern Pacific officials are disturbed over the possibility that the 1,000 commonwealers from this city and Tacoma, who are now marching to join their forces at Puyallup Junction, will attempt to seize a train at that point.

Troutsdale, Or., April 28.—Fifty deputies who came here last night under United States Marshal Grady and Sheriff Kelly deterred the Portland contingent of the commonweal army from capturing a Union Pacific train at this point. After the train had pulled out the 600 men went into camp for the night. They are determined to push ahead to-day.

Tacoma, Wash., April 28.—The First regiment, state militia, has received orders to be in readiness to proceed to Puyallup. The militiamen here assembled at their armory at midnight.

Des Moines, April 30.—Des Moines is in a state of intense excitement over the arrival of Kelly's industrial army. The men had marched twenty-seven miles Saturday night without food and were held by the police five miles out of the city in a driving rain storm with no provisions or shelter. The action of the authorities aroused much indignation among the laboring people, and when 5 o'clock last evening the army finally marched up Grand avenue to the camp on the east side of town, wet, haggard and weary, their pitiable condition aroused sympathy almost as great as that which was theirs at Council Bluffs. A mass meeting of laboring men has been called for to-day. Committees are at work soliciting food and money, and threats are made that unless transportation is secured to Chicago, radical steps will be taken. The start from Van Meter was made in a heavy storm and when day dawned the column was still 15 miles from its destination. The commissary wagons were empty and the men wet and hungry, but they plodded on, the advance guard reaching Walnut creek, five miles west, before noon. The men straggled in during the afternoon and by 3 o'clock 1,000 men gathered. Mayor Hillis sent thirty policemen and Sheriff McGarraugh as many deputies to meet the army and inform them that they would have to pass on through Des Moines to a deserted stove factory, where ample food and shelter were provided. This Kelly refused to do, saying his men must be fed before they marched the additional miles. The officers were obdurate and the 1,000 hungry men stood shivering in the rain until 4:30 o'clock hoping for provisions. Gen. Weaver sent out forty loaves of bread, and that served as breakfast and dinner, Mayor Hillis saying that if the men would not go to where the food was they should have none. At last Kelly consented to move and the march began. Dozens of carriages lined the route into town, and with the sheriff, chief of police, mayor and a guard of officers and deputies, the industrials moved up the city's principal streets, feebly singing their army songs. The streets were lined with spectators, and as the weary men marched by, weak from hunger, women wept and sympathizers grew violent in denouncing the authorities. The stove factory, one and a half miles east of the capitol, furnished shelter for all the men, and their spirits soon revived when a wholesome supper furnished by the city was given them. Many straggled in during the evening, and 1,250 slept in the camp.

"Of course we will get a train," said Kelly. "We will stay here until we do get one. That is certain. I have been informed that arrangements are being made to take us out Tuesday with teams, but we won't go until we go on a train, and on one furnished by the railway officials. We will not seize one, however; there need be no fear on that score."

The army expects to remain quietly in camp to-day awaiting the result of the efforts of the trade and labor assembly to secure transportation. To-day's mass meeting is expected to decide what will be done.

Washington, April 30—James S. Coxey, commander-in-chief of the good roads army of the commonweal, standing on a rickety wagon in the center of the Brightwood driving park, waving aloft his Alpine hat to one of the most cosmopolitan and extensive audiences ever gathered in Washington, announced yesterday afternoon that the greatest march of the nineteenth century had been accomplished.

Three hundred and fifty miserably dressed, woe-begotten, out-at-the-elbows and run-down-at-the-heels specimens of humanity marched into the park, led by a wheezing apology for a band, pitched tents and stretched themselves in the sun. Thousands from the city turned out to make a holiday of it and inspect the curious aggregation.

Thick clouds of dust overhung the two roads leading to Brightwood from the city all day long, and they were plowed with more travel than customarily beats. Two endless processions swept along the roads all day with such variety of travelers as had never turned out in Washington since war times. Every horse and wheel vehicle in the city had apparently been pressed into service, while the little trolly railway line which was built for the benefit of suburban residents was ridiculously inadequate to the demands upon it. Lining the entrances to the park enterprising colored citizens had established their booths for traffic in ginger bread and sweetened water which passed current for lemonade. The semblance to a circus lay-out was further enforced by the thimble riggers and shell men stalking about the outskirts of the crowd. But when the people poured into the park enclosure the suggestion of circus day was full-blown. In the center of the half-mile race track flapped the canvas enclosure which encircled the quarters of the commonweal army.

In an interview Gen. Coxey said that if they were not permitted to meet in front of the capitol they would appeal to the highest court, and if it was decided against them there would be a revolution.

Washington, May 1. — Coxey's army will start on its march past the White House, government buildings and the capitol to-morrow, and it is possible that a collision between police and the army will occur. Mr. Coxey saw Maj. Moore, the chief of police, and announced to him his intention of speaking on the capitol steps. He was told that if he did so he would be arrested. Some commonwealers intimate that when repulsed the army will disband, its members will enter the grounds as individuals and then do their speechmaking under the great statue of Christopher Columbus at the steps.

"If they do," says Maj. Moore, "they will be arrested." Having finished their public demonstration the commonweal soldiers will march to a vacant lot at Second and M streets southwest, where they will pitch their tents, and the leaders announce that this will be the permanent camp of the army of peace until the good roads bills are passed by congress. Other contingents are expected to join them here.

Helena, Mont., May 1.—Maj. Discom, with three companies of the twenty-second infantry, from Fort Keogh, escorted Hogan's army into Helena at 9 o'clock this morning on a special train, which left Forsythe at 9 o'clock last night. There was no demonstration on the train's arrival; only the usual crowd of loungers being at the depot. The prisoners number 331 men. After stopping fifteen minutes at the station the train moved two miles west. There the prisoners were unloaded and marched to the fair grounds, where the soldiers pitched camp.

Spokane, Wash., May 1. — Spokaners were considerably surprised this morning to find a train load of real United States soldiers pulling into the Northern Pacific depot. About 150 troopers of the Fourth infantry from Fort Sherman constituted the party. Late last evening United States Marshal Drake of Tacoma wired the authorities at Fort Sherman for troops to assist him in preserving order at Puyallup, where over 1,000 commonwealers have camped. Military officers will divulge no information as to the destination, and the train is now sidetracked here, waiting orders. It is thought likely that the troops will remain here and prevent the passage of any train which may contain commonwealers. The local commonwealers now number 400, intend starting east to-morrow.

Des Moines, May 1.—Rumors of a general tie-up of all the railroads running out of Des Moines were rife to-day, and railroad officials, who have been in a state of apprehension since Kelly started from Council Bluffs, were much exercised. Labor leaders said that if Kelly was not furnished transportation within three or four days, the strike would spread to all the roads here, and that the tie-up would continue until the army was carried to Chicago.

Mayor Hillis states that he will go to the camp with a police magistrate, declare the army under arrest, try the men in a bunch as vagrants and sentence them to three days in jail. Then he said he would turn the papers over to the sheriff to serve, thus shifting the responsibility to the county. Kelly declared that he would not walk out of town, and said he expected to have a train Wednesday. His army grew very rapidly during the day. More are coming all the time, and Kelly expects to lead 2,000 to Chicago.

Helena, Mont., May 1.—Hogan's army, numbering 330 men, arrived here to-day on a special train in charge of soldiers from Fort Keogh. The prisoners were taken to the fair grounds, two miles from the city, and went into camp under military guard.

WORK OF CONGRESS

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, April 27.—The morning hour in the senate was spent in a heated discussion of Mr. Allen's resolution, introduced yesterday, condemning the district commissioners' proclamation against the Coxeyites coming to the capitol. Senators Vest, Wolcott, Dolph and Gray spoke against the resolution. Before any action had been taken on the resolution Mr. Harris moved to take up a resolution providing that "To-morrow and until otherwise ordered the senate shall meet at 11 o'clock a. m." Senators Peffer and Allen objected to the pending resolution being displaced and demanded the ayes and nays. The vote (which also showed the attitude of the senate on Mr. Allen's resolution) was as follows:

Ayes—Aldrich, Allison, Bates, Berry, Blackburn, Blanchard, Brice, Caffery, Call, Camden, Coke, Cullom, Dubois, Faulkner, George, Gibson, Gorman, Gray, Hale, Hansbrough, Harris, Hawley, Higgins, Hunton, Jarvis, Jones (Ark.), Lindsay, Lodge, McMillan, McPherson, Manderson, Martin, Mills, Mitchell (Wis.), Morrill, Palmer, Pasco, Perkins, Platt, Power, Proctor, Pugh, Roach, Sherman, Shoup, Teller, Turpie, Vest, Vilas, Voorhees, Walsh, Washburn, White, Wolcott—54.

Nays—Allen, Dolph, Frye, Gallinger, Kyle, Peffer—6.

The senate, without division, then agreed to the Harris resolution, and Mr. Harris moved to take up the tariff bill, and Mr. Higgins (Rep., Del.) took the floor in opposition to the bill.

The house finished consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Washington, April 28. — This was a field day in the senate. There was manoeuvering, marching, flashing and rapid firing. The bugle notes of defiance had sounded on both sides. Hostilities did not actually begin, but it was apparent that there was no intention that they should begin. There was counter marching, retreats, and a quick reforming of lines, leaving the contending armies within the same fortifications and camping on the same grounds as before.

Mr. Aldrich demanded that Mr. Harris (Tenn.) speak for the Democratic side and say whether or not the Democrats would vote to-day on the tariff bill as it now stood. All eyes centered upon the sturdy white haired senator from Tennessee, but he did not reply. There were hurried consultations and then Mr. Harris made a proposition to vote on the senate bill, and followed it up with a request for unanimous consent for such a vote. It was at once apparent that Mr. Aldrich did not intend to accept this offer. Several Republicans objected to the unanimous consent, and Mr. Aldrich, with some difficulty, received recognition. He explained that while he had offered to vote on the house bill, he had only asked the Democratic senators if they would vote on the senate bill. Further than this he made the proposition to the senate and not to the Democratic caucus, which he intimated had been held since his proposition had been made. He was accused of backing down and quibbling, and Senator White of California intimated that he had been bluffing and had been "called," and also said that the senator from Rhode Island would probably understand the term. The senate and spectators knew, and an audible demonstration followed the sally. Mr. Aldrich evidently knew what was meant and replied by saying that it was not common in places where the words were applicable to allow the adversary two hours to look over his hand before making the call, and that was what the Democratic senators had done. Senator Teller stated his objections to a vote in vigorous terms, and in an allusion to the compromise tariff bill brought out a vigorous denial by Senator Voorhees that any such bill was in existence. But the interest in the battle had disappeared, the bugle sounded retreat, and the most dramatic incident of the senate tariff debate closed.

Washington, April 30.—The Democratic senators who have been engaged in preparing a tariff compromise considered the sugar duty especially to-day and decided, besides fixing a tariff of 40 per cent ad valorem on all sugar, to impose a further duty of 1-10 of a cent on sugar imported from countries paying a bounty to sugar producers. This last provision is supposed to be aimed especially at Germany, where a bounty is paid on beet sugar. It has been decided also to extend the time when the sugar schedule shall take effect until Jan. 1, 1895, which will insure the bounty under the McKinley law for this season's crop. It is understood that these two provisions have been inserted in response to the earnest solicitations of the Louisiana senators. The senate to-day resumed consideration of the tariff bill. There has as yet been no indication that a time will be agreed upon when a vote shall be taken.

In the house the army appropriation bill was taken up.

Washington, May 1.—Senator Harris, who is in charge of the tariff bill, lost patience to-day at the way in which progress was impeded by Senator Hale in the morning hour. As on several preceding days Mr. Hale objected to giving way for special measures in the morning hour. Finally Mr. Harris abruptly moved that the senate proceed with the consideration of the tariff bill. The feeling between senators on both sides is growing bitter, and there were several severe passages at arms during the day.

The house went into committee of the whole to consider the army appropriation bill. Mr. Outhwaite offered a committee amendment that no appointment of assistant adjutant general with rank of major should be made until the number of officers in that grade had been reduced below four, and that hereafter there should be only four officers in said grade, and that future promotions in adjutant-generals, paymasters and smaller branches should be filled from the next lower grades. The next amendment was agreed to by a vote of 40 to 38. Mr. Pickler (Rep., S. D.) offered an amendment that no officer of the army should be detailed to act as Indian agent unless the president should consider it best to do so. The chairman ruled the amendment out on a point of order.

BREVITIES.

Miss Katie Ford is visiting friends in town this week.

Hill is certainly poorer and probably wiser since the strike.

J. A, Dainard returned from Crookston last Saturday.

C. G. Rapp made a business trip to Red Lake Falls last Monday.

K. O Gigstad made a business trir to Crookston the first of the week,

Matt Skala, of Red Lake Falls, was calling on friends here last Sunday.

Attorney Ira C. Richardson, of Thief River Falls, was in town last Monday,

Collector Berg, of the McCormick Co, is doing business in town this week.

C. A. Brink and Fred Eikhof were doing business at Red Lake Falls last Monday,

The Pioneer Press and Globe have reduced their prices to two cents a copy.

P. S. Ware, of the Thief River Falls Press, was in town last Monday on his way to Duluth.

Estimator Theo. Beaulieu and family were in town today on their way to White Earth.

The rain last Sunday night and today have given us all the moisture we will need for several weeks.

Business has been very quiet the past week farmers being able to get into town only on foot.

Our village streets have been nearly impassible for almost a month and still no signs of improvement.

Ex-President Harrison, it is claimed, will again be a candidate for the Republican nomination for president.

J. L. Johnson wishes to announce to announce that he has received a full line of wall paper which he will sell at hard time prices.

President Hill is compelled to recognize organized labor. Good thing. All labor should organize and compel capital to tramp awhile,

P. P. Wold, of Rocksbury, was in town last Monday on his way home from attending the assessors convention at Crookston last Saturday,

It is rumored on the street in a quiet way that our reform village council will hold a meeting next Monday night, providing of course, it is a nice dark night.

Although the late rains have delayed seeding the spring is still much more advanced than last year, A year ago now snow could be seen in places and the weather and ground were cold during most of the month.

A small branch of Coxey's army struck Crookston yesterday morning They had started at Grand Forks and were marching south along the line of the Great Northern, The army was composed of about twenty-five men.

Litchfield Independent. Government ownership of railroads has received many new advocates within the past week. There would be no strikes then, the men would be well paid and traffic rates would be much lower, than now.

The acreage of wheat will be much smaller this year than usual. Every farmer fully realizes that wheat will in all probabilities command a very poor price in the fall and more barley, oats and flax will be sown than ever before,

Lake City Republican. Grover Cleveland will go down to posterity as one of the most prominent men in American history. Washington freed the country, Lincoln freed the slave and Cleveland has freed the laboring classes from their daily toil.

It looked yesterday as if we would not have a train for some time as no trains left Crookston during the day. Everything was tied up tight and if it had not been for the settlement we would have been without railroad facilities for some time to come.

Coxey's army has reached Washington and claim they will stay there until their requests are granted. In the meantime several thousand men in different parts of the country are headed in that direction and Washington promises to be a lively city this summer.

It is difficult to state which have lost the most, the government or the Great Northern road, in the strike. Several hundred deputy U. S. marshalls have been at work besides the regular troops which the government must pay for. The authorities seemed very eager to give Hill anything he wanted.

Some seeding was done last week and a little the first of this week but today's rain will stop work for several days. On the sand ridges nearly all the grain is in and in many places already up, but on the lower lands not over one quarter of the wheat has been sown.

We learn that Swan Anderson, of Black River is a candidate for the People's party nomination for county commissioner for this district, Swan is one of the old settlers and is everywhere recognized as an honest straightforward man, Should he be nominated his election is assured.

When the public read of the militia being placed under arms, the trains being loaded down with U. S. marshalls, let them just think for a moment of the condition of a Great Northern section laborer who has to pay house rent and keep his family on $1 a day.—Penny Press.

Report was received here this morning that the Great Northern strike had been settled by the company, the men coming out victorious. Information is very meager but, it is learned that the company will take back all of the old men at advanced wages. This is a signal victory for the A. R. U. which is a new organization hardly a year old. The train which came up from Crookston today was manned by brakeman for the first time since the strike began. They say that they have orders to go to work from President Debs.

The man who wipes his nose on his sleeve, picks his teeth with a fork, squirts tobacco juice on the cook stove hearth, rides to mill with corn in, one end of the sack and stone in the other drives to town with hickory bark lines, deposits his money in last winter's sock, insists on paying his taxes with coon skins and wild honey, fastens his suspenders with wooden pegs, and sends off for goods when he has the cash, is the rooster who has no use for a home paper, and his brother is the chap who tries to do business without advertising.—Ex.

Polk county has several favored sons who are aspirants for the Peoples party nomination for congress this year, We learn that Senator E. E. Lommen, Co, Atty, A. R, Hoiston, and Andrew Steenerson will try for the Polk county delegation. These gentlemen will ask for an instructed delegation to the seventh congressional convention and the one who carries the county will a first class show of getting the nomination, Polk county is the banner Peoples party county in the district and is certainly entitled to the distinction of naming the next congressman, We want to exercise great care in our selection and the man who we select should be above reproach. He should be a man who has the respect of the people and whom our party will support unanimously. It is essential that we nominate a man whom we can elect as it is important that the Peoples party elect the next congressman and that he shall come from Polk county,

The funeral of the late A, O, Runice took place yesterday afternoon from St. Peter's Norwegian Lutheran Church, Rev. O. Kleland officiating.

Mr, Runice was born at West Prairie Crawford county, Wis., April 16th 1860 He remained at home until 19 years old, when he came to Red Wing and spent two years at the Red Wing seminary, He afterward went to North Dakota and engaged in the real estate and banking business at Mayville. There he married Miss Otina Karoline Larson. About a year later his wife died.

Mr. Runice moved from Mayville to St. Hilaire Minn, While there he made the acquaintance of Miss Annie Ottum of Red Wing, whom he married Later he moved to Sheldon N, D, where the family has since resided and where Mr. Runice has been interested in banking. A year and a half ago he was taken sick with consumption. He went south and later west to Colorado, with hopes of regaining his health. As previously reported he died at Denver on the 14th of the present month.

He was an energetic young man who had already shown a remarkable capacity for making a leading way through the world. Always honest and upright in his dealings he won the confidance and esteem of all with whom he came in contact, By his business acquaintances and his numerous friends his memory will long be cherished.

Mrs. Runice and her two daughters will make their future home in this city,—Advance Sun,

The Strike.

In looking over the Twin city dailies, with but one single exception and that the Minneapolis Tribune, which did not express its views editorially, we find them against the strikers and in favor of Mr. Hill and his English stock holders. Out side of the two cities it is altogether different, Here and there we find a paper that condemns the men for being too hasty, but we have yet to find the paper outside of the two cities that actually takes sides with the company. The statements sent broadcast and profusely published by Hill's papers in Minneapolis and St. Paul denying that a cut in wages had been made on April 1st, is not substantiated by the men in his employ. The dissatisfaction among his men is not altogether confined to the reduction of salaries which has occured twice since last fall both times ranging all the way in amount from 10 to 30 per cent, but schemes have been concocted and plans entered into by the railway officials in the way of changing around the men and the work until they were able to get 12 or 13 hours steady employment out of each man at a salery of from $28 to $30 per month, A case is brought to our notice where a car repairer had been getting $60 a month at Aberdeen; he was changed to Breckenridge because he was a reliable man and his pay reduced to $30. He paid $16 here for board and $10 a month rent at Aberdeen for his family thus leaving him $4 a month for all the necessaries of life for a wife and several children, besides clothing for himself Another case is reported where section men work for 90 cents and $1 a day on the Breckenridge extension. They are required to leave their homes during the afternoon and come to Breckenridge on No. 48 arriving there at 9. p, m,, as their pay is so small, they lack money to pay for bed and necessary food, and the next morning at 5 o'clock they have been required to leave without breakfast, after sleeping on hard benches in the depot all night, and unload ties from a moving train all the forenoon and sometimes all day, Men employed in the round house at $26.50 a month are asked to shovel coal, wipe engines, put out and take switch lights etc, for 13 hours each day and if they complain they are told to stay at home if they don't want to work. Out in Montana an operator got $51.00 before the last cut, He paid $33.00 for his board. It cost 25 cents for a shave, 50 cents for a hair cut and 25 cents to have a white shirt done up, Of course these three items may be singled out of numerous others as extravagance. He could do his own shaving and washing and leave his hair grow a la Peffer. It is no wonder to us that the men have grown desperate. If they left the company's employ a single day to look for another position their places are taken by others, and if unsuccessful in quest of a new position, they are left with no employment and without provision for their families, Or if one or a dozen men ask the company for a raise in wages, they would be told to look for work elsewhere if they were not satisfied. The only alternative was to quit in a body and compel the company to recognize them. The strike, for its magnitude has been exceptionally orderly and beyond the uncoupling of a few cars and spiking switches, very little property destroyed. While we don't expect the men to receive all they ask for, we hope to hear of a victory for them, be the concession on the part of the company ever so small,—Norman County Index,

The Peoples Party managers of Ohio are perfecting arrangements to go to their state convention in their own wagons ignoring public conveyances entirely. Why would it not be a good scheme in our own state? The distance from the remotest portions of the state would perhaps be too great, but the delegates and all who desire to attend residing within a hundred miles of Minneapolis can attend in their own conveyances almost as economically as by rail and the pomp and majesty of the common people foregoing the ease and luxuries of railway travel would be worth thousands of votes to the party and show to the plutes that we are prepared to suffer and toil (and fight if necessary) to maintain our mortgaged liberties. We say let it be done.

The People's party state central committee have decided to hold the state convention at Minneapolis not later than June 10th. This decision has made matters lively in Polk county and the county convention will probably be called to meet at Crookston not later than the first week in June, In view of the fact that times are hard it has been proposed to hold only one county convention this year, in fact to elect delegates to the state convention, the congressional convention and legislative convention and nominate county officers all at one time. We hope this will be done as it will insure a large convention and the very best men of the party will be likely to attend. The People's party cannot afford to make any mistakes this year, and we need a large representation of our best men to nominate a ticket.

I have derived a great benefit from Beggs. Blood Purifier and Blood Maker and will take great pleasure in recommending it to all I meet.—Chas Hill, Aberdeen, O. —for sale by J. L. Johnson Druggest.

I have been troubled for several years with scrofula, caused by impure blood, but could get no relief until lately. Our druggist recommended Beggs' Blood Purifier and Blood maker so highly that I decided to try it and have up to the present time, used five bottles and find it to be all that it is recommended. —Orrin Stone, Otsego Wis,—For sale by J. L. Johnson, Druggist,

I have recommended Beggs' Blood Purifier and Cherry Cough Syrup several times and must say that I have been surprised and more than pleased at results following use of same. I am not in habit of endorsing patent medicines, but can say truthfully, Beggs' medicines are all that is claimed for them,—Tesah Jones, M., D., Wintersville, Mo.—For sale by J. L. Johnson Druggest.

My wife had the worst case of Dandruff I ever saw and had tried three or four other remedies, and two bottles of Beggs' Hair Renewer proved all claimed for it.—E. P. Dunagan, Gainsville, Ga.—For sale by J. L. Johnson, Druggist.

In one of our large cities a short time ago an editor was met by a friend, who, taking him by the hand, exclaimed:

"I am delighted to see you. How long are you going to stay?"

"Why, I think," said the editor, "I shall stay while my money lasts."

"How disappointed I am!" said the friend. "I hoped you were going to stay a day or two."—Tit-Bits.

A DILEMMA.

The Key to the Situation Was Unfortunately Not to Be Had.

Herbert and Amelia were engaged to be married. They were seated alone one afternoon in the drawing room at her home awaiting the return of her parents, who had gone for a short stroll.

"Do you know, Amelia," he was saying, "I don't believe that the course of true love never does run smooth? In our case I am sure nothing has ever happened to cast the slightest shadow across the sunlit path of our mutual affection. Two hearts like ours—what is the matter?"

She was holding her pocket handkerchief to her nose.

"I'm afraid my nose is bleeding just a little. It sometimes does this hot weather. If you will excuse me, I'll retire."

"No, don't run away, darling. I'll stop it in a minute. A perfect cure. Here!"

He ran to the closed door to get the key from the lock. He turned it about, but it was some seconds before he could remove it.

"Ah, here it is!" he exclaimed at last.

"But what is the use of it?"

"Oh, I'll show you. The application of anything cold to the back of the neck has the effect of—of—well, I don't know exactly what it is that happens—it chills the blood, or stops the circulation, or something of the sort."

"Are you sure it is safe, Herbert?"

"Oh, perfectly. A fellow I know cured himself for life. No, I don't exactly mean that. Put it down the back of your neck. That's right."

"Ugh! How cold it feels!"

"Now hold your hands high above your head for a short time."

"Oh, Herbert!"

"What's the matter?"

"Oh, Herbert, I—I—it's slipped!"

"What?"

"There's some one at the door. Just see who it is."

Herbert went to the door, but found it would not open. He had inadvertently locked it when removing the key.

"One moment, please!" he shouted. Then, turning to Amelia, "Just lend me the key a moment, dear."

"I told you. It's—it's gone!"

"Gone!" he gasped as he suddenly realized the awkwardness of the situation. "Can't I—that is to say, can't you get it?"

"Open the door! Who is in there?"

"That is papa. Good gracious, what shall we do! Why don't you speak to him?"

"Mr. Wilkins, is that you?"

"Certainly it is, sir. Why in thunder don't you open the door?"

"I can't, sir."

"Can't! The key was on the inside, I know."

"Yes; but your daughter"——

"My daughter! Is Amelia in there?"

"Yes; she"——

"Then open the door instantly, or I'll"——

"Pray be calm, sir."

"Be calm, indeed! Where is that key?"

"She swallowed it—no, I don't mean that. It's gone down."

"Gone down where?"

"She put it down her throat—no, neck—and she lost it!"

"Are you mad?"

"Her blouse was needing—I mean her nose was bleeding, and I put the key in the neck of her back, and it slipped down."

But Amelia's father had gone, bent on putting some energetic measures into execution. Her mother now came to the door.

"Oh, Amelia, what does it all mean? Where is the key?"

"I have it, mamma!"

"Then why don't you open the door?"

"Because"—in a loud whisper through the keyhole—"because Herbert's here!"

"Oh, the monster!"

"Amelia, for heaven's sake get that key!" pleaded Herbert.

"How can I," she replied warmly, "unless you leave the room?"

"But I can't leave the room until you do. Stay! I'll draw down the blinds and go out on the balcony. Now, for goodness' sake be quick! Eh? Of course! I give you my word of honor."

Poor Herbert had hardly stepped outside the window when he saw the massive form of Mr. Wilkins alight at the other end of the balcony. Escape was impossible, and he could not of course retreat into the drawing room.

"Ha! Now, sir," shouted the enraged father, "if you will just go back out of the public gaze we will settle this matter."

"Can't go in there, sir!"

"Can't, indeed!"

"No. Your d-d-daughter is—is disrobing!"

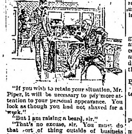
"What? You unmitigated scoundrel!"

Mr. Wilkins sprang like a tiger at Herbert before the young man could get in one word of explanation, and the two were instantly engaged in a very desperate encounter on the first floor balcony, to the great excitement of the neighbors and people in the street.

Amelia's father was a powerful man and an experienced wrestler. He was, moreover, mad with rage.

The struggle continued for some time, and it seemed as though one or the other would certainly throw his adversary over the balcony. But suddenly the blind was drawn up, and two female faces appeared at the window, and voices were heard calling out, "Here's the key." Amelia had found the key, opened the door for her mother, and mutual explanations all round rendered any further development of the balcony scene unnecessary.—Tit-Bits.

A Proper Time For Everything.



"If you wish to retain your situation, Mr. Piper, it will be necessary to pay more attention to your personal appearance. You look as though you had not shaved for a week."

"But I am raising a beard, sir."

"That's no excuse, sir. You must do that sort of thing outside of business hours."—Life.

Useless.

Elderly Gentleman (to little boy who is buying taffy)—My young friend, don't you think that instead of spending all the pennies you get it would be better to put some away for a rainy day?

Little Boy—Oh, no. What's the good of money on a rainy day? Ma never lets me stir out of the house.—Spare Moments.

A Nervous Man.

Customer—Bring me a beefsteak, but a big one.

Waiter—Yes, sir.

Customer—Bring as big a one as possible. Every little thing annoys me and makes me nervous.—Texas Siftings.

A Philanthropist.

"You want $100 more?" said the promoter of the scheme for laying pipe lines all over the city for the delivery of fresh milk from a central reservoir. "You want $100 this time, do you? What has become of the $50 I gave you only two days ago?"

"That money, sir," replied the incorruptible alderman from the Steenth ward sternly, "was devoted to the sacred cause of charity. It was given, sir, in sums of $3 to 25 needy voters in my ward, who will be found at the polls next Tuesday battling, sir, for the eternal principles of truth and justice!"—Chicago Tribune.

Rebuked.

A Difficult Question.

This story is going to end in a mystery.

I know this because, like a true artist, I thought it all out before putting pen to paper.

It was the evening of Arabella's birthday. Alphonso, her betrothed, was with her.

They were very, very happy.

Suddenly a bright thought struck Alphonso.

That is a way bright thoughts have.

But I am quite willing to be slugged by them.

Bright thoughts are worth bright dollars.

But to our tale.

Quoth Alphonso:

"Darling!"

Quoth Arabella:

"Yes, darling."

"Isn't this your birthday, darling?"

"Yes, dearest."

"Well, pet, I propose to give you a kiss for every year of your age."

"Oh, darling!"

They embrace rapturously.

He kisses her seven times, then chortles:

"These don't count, for you haven't told me your age yet. How old is my darling?"

"Oh, darling!"

"How old is my ickle tootsy wootsy?"

Here began a great struggle in Arabella's mind.

She had reached that age when she wished to be thought several years younger.

That is likewise the age when an unwedded maiden most keenly appreciates kisses.

She did not want to tell him her real age.

She wanted all the kisses she could get.

Here, gentle reader, is the mystery foretold exclusively in our first line.

Did she claim all the kisses to which she was entitled or not?—Truth.

Mistake of "Wanting the Best."

At a little dinner party given in one of the best hotels the host ordered wine for his five guests. Not caring to pay for too much champagne, he first ordered "white wine."

"What kind?" asked the waiter.

"The best you've got."

"Do you wish to look at the card?"

"No. Just give us the best you've got. About three quarts."

The waiter obeyed, and all agreed that it was very good indeed. Late that night the host called for his bill. He had figured his bill at about $60. It proved to be more than $100.

"What's this?" he asked. "There's some mistake here."

They gave him an itemized bill just to satisfy him. He ran his eye over it until he came to the "white wine" item, and then he gasped:

Three quarts at $14.............. $42

"That must be good," he remarked.

"Yes, sir. The best we have."

Since then he orders cheap and common fluids, such as champagne.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Wanted Him to Talk.

There are some disadvantages which attach themselves to persons who have become famous. These, however, often have their ludicrous side.

It is said that at one time Henry Clay was traveling in the west and stopped over night in a little log cabin inhabited by an old man and his wife. After breakfast the next morning his old host, who had been in a flutter of excitement ever since he learned who his distinguished guest was, said he would like to make one slight request before the visitor departed.

"Couldn't ye," he said, with evident anxiety, "couldn't ye jest make my wife an me a little speech before leavin us?"—Youth's Companion.

Found an Exception.

"This law of compensation, my boy," grumbled Uncle Allen Sparks, "doesn't run through everything. Now, there's my neighbor Shawcross. He's as lean as a scarecrow, and I weigh over 200 pounds. His health is just as good as mine, he enjoys life fully as well as I do, we're worth about the same amount of money, and it only costs him half as much to buy a suit of clothes as it costs me. And they last him twice as long, blame him!" added Uncle Allen in the tone of an injured man.—Chicago Tribune.

Just the Man He Wanted.

A burglar who was doing a neat job on a large safe was horrified on looking up to see a man standing quietly beside him. He was about to retire when the gentleman said:

"Go ahead. I am interested in that job."

"Why?" asked the astonished burglar.

"Because I have forgotten the combination, and no living person knew it but myself. If you can get that safe open, I'll make it worth your while."—Texas Siftings.

An Insinuation.

Professor Garner, the monkey man, was a guest at Douglas Sladen's "at home," and among the people there assembled was a celebrated London publisher. A gentleman asked the publisher if he had been introduced to Professor Garner, who had caused the monkeys to talk.

"Oh," said the publisher, "I have known Professor Garner for many years."

"Really!" replied the other. "Did he teach you to talk?"—Detroit Free Press.

"Yes. I was wondering"——

"What?"

"I was wondering if he died hard."—New York Press.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifteen and 75-100 dollars the interest which became due on the first day of December A. D. 1893 which is claimed to be due and is due and unpaid at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John A. Lundbeck and Hendrick J. Lundbeck his wife, mortgagors to J. E. Luce, mortgagee, bearing date the first day of June A. D. 1891, and duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the first day of June A. D. 1891, at 4 o'clock p. m., in book 59 of mortgages, on page 574 thereof, which said mortgage was executed to secure that certain promissory note for three hundred and fifty dollars, dated June 1st 1893 with interest annually from date thereof at 9 per cent, and due June 1st 1896, and signed by said mortgagors as makers and delivered and payable to the order of said mortgagee and the said mortgagee by reason of the said default in the payment of said interest has elected and hereby elects to use his option as provided in said mortgage and he hereby declares that the whole sum of money which is secured by said mortgage is now due and payable and there is claimed to be due and payable and unpaid at the date of this notice upon said mortgage the sum of three hundred and seventy-three and 75-100 dollars principal and interest: and no action or proceedings at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage viz: The south one half (S ½) of the North west quarter (NW ¼) and lots three (3) and four (4) of Section numbered three (3) in Township numbered one hundred and fifty-two (152) of Range numbered forty-four (44) containing one hundred and sixty acres according to the government survey thereof in Polk county and state of Minnesota with hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt interest and taxes if any on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law: which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county at at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston in said county and state on Saturday the 7th day of June A. D. 1894 at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

The Power of Gold.

He loved her.

She loved him.

They loved each other.

But her father objected because the young man was almost a total stranger.

The time had come when the youth must ask the father for his daughter, and he feared to go to him.

He held a long conference with his beloved.

He told her he did not want to ask her father.

"George, dear," she asked in a tremulous whisper, "how much are you worth?"

"A million dollars, darling," he responded proudly.

Her face shone in the twilight.

"Then you don't have to ask him," she said, with simple trust. "Let him know that, and he will ask you."

And George gave the old man a tip.—Detroit Free Press.

A Real Nice Fellow.

Strawber—Do you suppose Clara Penrose cares anything for me?

Singerly—Well, she said some pretty nice things about you last night when I was here.

Strawber—Did she? What were they?

Singerly (seriously)—For one thing, she said you were a fine dancer. It was such a comfort, she said, to find a man who really danced well.

Strawber—I'm sure I'm glad she likes my dancing. I've spent enough time at it.

Singerly—Then she said your manners were perfect. It was a pleasure to go anywhere with you, she said, because she felt so perfectly secure with you and sure of you.

Strawber (delighted)—Gracious! I had no idea she thought so much of me as that. Did she say anything else?

Singerly—Oh, yes. She spoke about your conversation. In the light society talk of the day she thinks you have no equal, and then you are so full of tact, and your clothes were always so stylish, so neat, without being too extreme. Oh, she gave you a great sendoff, old man.

Strawber (beside himself)—I should say she did. I must cultivate that girl. Beautiful, rich, accomplished. What more could a man want in a wife? I have always (complacently) fancied her, but now I think the feeling is even deeper than that.

Singerly (warningly)—Don't let it get too deep, old man. I didn't tell you all.

Strawber—Didn't you? What more was there?

Singerly—She wound up by saying that, in fact, you were just the sort of a fellow that no girl would ever think of marrying.—Exchange.

Greatly Surprised.

Lieutenant Blank of the army is 6 feet 4 inches tall and tips the scale at 250 pounds. He was stationed for many years in Washington, attached to a scientific bureau of the government, his writings being well known to the scientific world.

Much of his writing was done evenings at home, and he would sometimes carry home necessary reference books and return them to his office at will. One morning he gathered together several, none of them very small, and putting them under his arm started for his office.

In the course of his walk he was brought face to face with a very black little negro, who, with arms akimbo, chin dropped and his shining black eyes filled with wonder, had planted himself directly in front of Lieutenant Blank.

Before the gentleman had time to do more than take in this apparition of darkness the little "pickaninny" had thrown back his head, so as to be able to gaze up into the lieutenant's face, and in a tone of comical amazement exclaimed:

"Gude gracious, mister, is you gwine to school?"—Youth's Companion.

Uncle Eben looked sharply at the speaker, and turning away with a reminiscent smile said:

"Da's so, chile, I recken. Dar am chickens dat won' git back ter roos'—not 'nless dey comes back ez ghos' chickens. An I nebber am hyud ob no' henhouse sukerstition yit."—Washington Star.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

WANTED.—A position as a form of over a suburban residence as an ornament, and to pump water, sprinkle lawns, carry water up stairs, cut wood, cut feed, run a Dynamo for electric light purposes, and do a great variety of odd jobs. My services can be had very cheap, if taken now, during the slack season. Apply to my parents, the Aermotor Company, 12th, Rockwell and Fillmore streets, Chicago. N.B.—I am always at home and steady. Ours is the largest family of its kind in the world, and never has one of us gone wrong. We are also a most powerful family, with marvelous endurance. We have iron constitutions (or rather Steel ones) but are very sensitive, being visibly affected by a breath of air. We stand high and have great influence, being able to persuade water to run uphill. In fact, we are superior to anything ever having been placed by our creator between the earth and heavens. Our kind has been tried in many a hill and towers above everything everywhere. We are industrious beyond anything ever known, since we work 24 hours a day and more than 365 days in the year. We are untiring in our vigilance—we stand ever you day and night. We are economical beyond anything on the earth or in the heavens, as we take into our systems absolutely nothing but thin air. Wired Sleeves and Whaleboned Revers.

Among ingenious devices for holding expanded sleeves in the desired shape Worth is using a single threadlike wire stitched in the upper edge of the sleeve drapery. This is not put in simple balloon puffs, but in a scarf around the top of close sleeves, starting in the inside seam, then curving out to give breadth, drooping to show the sleeve underneath, and sewed to it without meeting. The open draped top is then faced with ribbon of a contrasting color, and the tiny wire is stitched along the upper edge in the seam, which adds the facing. Thus a shot pink and green surah waist has sleeves of this kind faced with black moire ribbon two inches wide holding a wire in the edge of the top. Other trimming on the waist is a bib-frill of white guipure falling low from a stock of black moire ribbon, and almost reaching a belt of the same.

Another novel way of giving breadth to new gowns is that of putting a slender whalebone in a rever of huge bows extending straight across from the throat out on the wide sleeves. This is an extreme fancy, somewhat like the Incroyable revers and bows of the Directory period. A straight length of silk four or five fingers wide is folded across in fan pleats, then strapped in the middle, and a whalebone is hemmed in along the upper edge. When set on at the throat the pleats each side of the strap fall like an open fan from below the whaleboned top, and thus make an effective drapery for the waist. A very rich gown with waist of white Venetian guipure lace has such a bow of pale blue silk brocaded with purple violets. The lace sleeves have wired tops of the silk, and the skirt is of cloth of the lightest shade of Parma violets.—Harper's Bazar.

Railroad Ballasted With Silver Ore.

Every one has heard that mahogany railroad ties are used very largely in Mexico, but not many people are aware that on one of the lines the ties are of ebony, and that a low grade of silver ore is absolutely used for ballast. Of course the explanation is that the ore did not pay to work, but this does not remove the impression of lavish extravagance which the first glance of this luxurious roadbed creates. More remarkable still, perhaps, is the beauty of some of the marble used in the bridge construction.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE BLIZZARD.

A piercing shriek, a maddening swirl,
And the blinding storm is on,
The wind-swept branches writhe and curl,
The fence and the road are gone;
Not a landmark remains on the yawning plains,
And the storm and the night are one.

There are needles of sleet in the icy blast
That pushes against the pane;
There are choking billows of snow, that cast
Their eddying depths amain,
And whirl with a cry through the falling sky
That moves upon the plain.

Against the stack in huddled fear
The unhoused cattle wait,
From out the storm rack, shrill and clear,
A horse neighs for his mate,
While a man in the storm with sturdy form
Is battling with his fate.

Alas! oh storm, for the days that dawn
When thy secrets shall be read,
Alas! for the aching hearts at home,
With their sickening weight of dread
Alas! for the one who will not come
Till the snows give up their dead.
—Georgiana Hodgkins.

JOBY PAID HIS FARE.

The sun had set; but the lower edges of the wild, stormy-looking clouds massed in the west were still aglow with vivid, crimson fire. In the east the grey gloom of the coming night was mounting up to the sky, and here and there a pale star already glimmered in the dusk. A brisk wind, of what sailors call "a half gale," was blowing, and the waters of the English Channel were breaking in short, angry waves of deep green in the hollows and snowy white where their crests curled and spouted in hissing foam. Far off to the southward a dim, bluish line, which only the experienced eye of a seaman could have recognized as land, marked the coast of France, while in the opposite quarter the chalky headlands of England gleamed faintly in the fading twilight.

The stout ship Falcon, leaning gallantly to the wind, was making her way down the channel, bound for America. The sails had been reefed, the cables coiled, and everything made snug for the night. Capt. Essex, pleased, as an old sailor always is when his vessel is well away from the dangers of the land, paced to and fro on his quarter-deck, gruffly humming a little song, the greater part of which was lost in the thick, bushy beard, though now and then you might have caught some words, as "The sea is the place for me, my lads," or "A lively ship and a willing crew."

Capt. Essex's little song was interrupted by sudden commotion in the forward part of the vessel. There was a sound of loud, angry talking, a hasty scuffling of feet, followed by the frightened sobbing of a child.

"Hallo!" exclaimed Capt. Essex, "what is the meaning of that row?"

"A stowaway, sir," answered one of the men from below.

"A stowaway on my ship!" growled the captain. "Bring the rascal here! We'll give him a taste of the rope's end first, and then—but what is that?"

"The stowaway, sir," was the response, as two of the crew approached, leading between them a very small and very ragged boy.

The anger in the captain's face gave place to a look of astonishment, mingled with pity, as his eyes rested upon the shivering form of the intruder. But he maintained the sternness of his tone as he addressed the boy.

"Well," said he, "what are you doing here?"

"N—nothing, sir," was the trembling reply.

"Who are you, and where did you come from? Speak up, now! No nonsense!"

"I'm Joby—Job Oliver, sir," said the boy, between sobs, which he vainly endeavored to choke down. "I live in London, by the docks, sir."

"What are you doing here, then?"

"I—I hid away down below, and—and they found me. I wasn't doing anything. I didn't mind. I'm not very big, and I don't weigh much."

He broke down with a gasp, and pressed his small, grimy fists into his streaming eyes. Then, as the captain remained silent, but continued to gaze at him with a tremendous frown, he made a brave effort to go on with his story.

"I haven't any mother or father, you see, and I have to earn my own living. Everybody says, 'He's too small. What is he good for?' and they don't take me; though I am strong. I can lift a trunk—a little one. I can run errands, very fast; but everybody says, 'Oh, he's too ragged and too dirty.' If I could get jobs, you see, I could get me a new suit of clothes, and everybody don't want me, and—" here a fresh storm of sobs shook the small frame.

"But you haven't told me yet what you are doing on board this ship," said the captain, preserving his severity with an effort.

"The ship was going to America," answered the boy. "Everybody is rich in America. Everybody wants you there, you see. Tom Dixey went there, and he makes a load of money."

"That's all very well," responded the captain; "but people who go to America pay for their passage; and to hide away so as to go without paying, is just the same as stealing so much money. Don't you know that?"

Evidently the boy had never taken that view of the question. He looked up at the captain's stern face with a frightened and startled expression. Then he began a hurried search in the pockets of his ragged jacket. From one he drew forth two coppers, from another a silver sixpence, and, from a third a shilling, much battered, chipped, and defaced. These he held out toward the captain.

"This is all I've got now. I earned the sixpence and the two pennies; the shilling a gentleman gave me. It's broken, but it is good silver, all the same."

"And what am I to do with these?" asked the captain.

"To pay my fare," replied the boy. "It's 'most enough, I think. I will earn the rest soon, when I get over there."

The good captain could maintain his gravity no longer. A smile lighted up his rugged features, as he said, kindly: "There, there, Joby, keep your money my boy. You are an honest little fellow, after all. You shall stay with me on the Falcon, and we will make a man of you. How will that suit you?"

Joby was delighted, of course. The sailors, who are wonderfully handy at such things, devised a suit of clothing for his small body. He speedily became a great favorite with the crew of the Falcon, proving himself to be active and intelligent and, what is far better, absolutely honest and truthful. The captain had grown very fond of Joby; and as for Joby—well, it was not long before everybody on board knew what Joby thought of the captain.

The Falcon, which was a sailing vessel, had met with head winds constantly since leaving the Channel, and on the fourth week out was struck by a heavy gale from the northeast. All day long the good ship labored with the mountainous waves, leaping and plunging till it seemed as though the groaning, creaking masts must come out of her. But she was a stanch, well-built craft, and had passed safely through many a worse tempest.

With the fall of the night, the gale increased in violence. The sails had been reduced to the heavy lower canvas, just sufficient to steady the vessel. The captain remained on deck, taking a position near the rail, where he could keep an eye on the rigging. Near him, sheltered by the bulwarks, sat little Joby, on a coil of rope.

At first the noise and confusion, the thunder of the water, the shriek of the wind through the cordage, and the wild pitching of the ship had frightened the boy. But when, by the light of a lantern near by, he saw the captain's face, he felt relieved, and rather enjoyed the excitement of the storm.

Suddenly, just as the captain was shouting an order through his trumpet, a vast billow seemed to rise out of the gloom and bear down upon the ship. It struck the vessel's side with an awful roar, throwing tons of water on the deck. Before he could save himself, the captain was lifted from his feet and flung overboard into the sea.

Almost at the same instant a small figure was seen to leap upon the rail, cling there a moment, and then leap outward into the darkness and disappear.

"Man overboard!"

The terrible cry rang above the roar of the tempest. For a moment all was panic and confusion. Then, under the mate's command, the ship was rounded to, with her head to the wind, and a boat ordered to be lowered.

"No use," said one of the men to the mate, who stood by the rail near where the captain had fallen overboard, "we could never find them in the daylight, let alone such a night as this."

"I am afraid not," answered the mate sadly. "Poor old man! Poor boy! Hark! what was that?"

"Falcon, ahoy!" The shout came long and strong from the darkness, not twenty yards from where the ship lay.

"The captain!" cried a dozen glad voices.

"Belay your jaw there, ye lubbers! Tail on that line and haul us aboard, or we'll be adrift."

Line! Us! What could he mean? But the mate had already discovered a curious thing—a light but strong rope, fastened to a ring in the bulwark and, extending outward into the darkness, toward the spot whence the captain's voice proceeded. It was drawn tight, as if some heavy burden were towing at the end of it.

In an instant sturdy arms were pulling at it with a will. Then a stout rope was lowered, and up it like a monkey, scrambled Joby, followed more slowly by Capt. Essex.

Then a great cheer went up, drowning the roar of the storm itself, as the crew gathered about the dripping forms of the captain and his little friend. A few words served to explain what had happened.

Joby with his eye on the captain, had seen him carried overboard. He knew that one end of the coil of light though strong rope upon which he sat was secured to the bulwark, for he had tied the knot himself that very day. Without pausing to think of his own danger, he took the free end of the rope between his teeth, and was in the water nearly as soon as the captain himself.

Though he could swim like a duck, he was borne helplessly along on the crest of the waves almost into the arms of Capt. Essex, who caught him as he was sweeping by. The captain fastened the line about both of their bodies; and partly swimming and partly towed by the ship, they had managed to keep their heads above the water until the Falcon was hove to.

The storm blew itself out during the night, and the next morning dawned clear and calm. All the forenoon Joby was observed to be very grave and silent, as if he were pondering some important question. Finally he presented himself before the captain in the cabin.

"Well, my boy," said the captain, "what can I do for you?"

"A man's life is worth a good deal of money, isn't it?" asked Joby, twirling his cap nervously as he spoke. "Not a boy like me, but a grown man."

"Yes, of course, my lad," replied the captain. "A man's life is supposed to be the most valuable of his possessions."

"Well, then," said Joby, twirling his cap still more nervously, "they say I saved your life last night. I don't say it was much, you see. Any fellow who can swim could do the same; only I happened to do it."

"Yes, you certainly did it, Joby. And what then?"

"You see—you see," stammered Joby, "I—I thought that would pay for my passage; then it wouldn't be stealing, you know."

Joby could not make out why the captain's honest eyes should suddenly grow moist, nor why the captain's right arm almost squeezed the breath out of his small body; nor yet why the captain's voice should be so husky, as he said:

"Joby, my lad, while old Tom Essex's hulk holds together, and a single timber of him floats, you shall never want for a berth, or be without a friend."

Some Virtue in Colored Glass.

It is not many years ago since the blue glass craze was general, and every one was fixing blue glass in his house windows in order to prolong his days and increase his happiness. Like every other craze that is overdone, blue glass soon became a drug in the market, but it is more than probable that there was just a grain of common sense in the idiocy. Recent experiments show that in certain diseases, tinted light has a great effect. We all know how rapidly sore eyes will mend under the influence of natural green, and it is now stated that any kind of rash disease is benefited by a red tint produced by glass of that color being placed in the windows. Every one knows that a good deal of comfort can be obtained from a subdued light, and after a while people generally will appreciate the value of colored glass, even if it does not prove to have any actual remedial influence.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Alive After a Fall of 250 Feet.

James Gallagher, a Providence miner, fell down the shaft of the Leggett's Creek mine, a distance of 250 feet, and, strange to say, still lives. The most remarkable fact connected with the accident, however, is that instead of being crushed into an unrecognizable mass, as one would suppose would have been the case, not a bone was broken, although he was seriously bruised, sustaining a severe scalp wound from coming in contact with the side of the shaft, together with other injuries. It is the opinion of the attending physician that Mr. Gallagher will in time recover from the effects of his wonderful fall.—Philadelphia Ledger.

BEAUTY ON THE INCREASE.

The Women of To-Day Better in Every Way Than Their Grandmothers.

The assertion that our national beauty is declining is more easily made than substantiated, for it is difficult to adduce satisfactory evidence. Supposing we place in the witness box a number of octogenarians or nonogenarians, we are not wholly convinced that their pleadings and opinions are free from bias, it being an admitted fact that elderly people are in the habit of exalting by-gone generations to the depreciation of the modern. I do not say this is done maliciously, but with advancing years one is apt to change one's critical standpoint, and to verge on pessimism, if not be actually swamped by it, says the Gentlewoman. Nor can we judge of a national type by pictures, as artists naturally choose the handsomest models procurable.

I am inclined to hold, with the Daily Graphic, that youth may take comfort. Look at the park in summer, go to our country houses in winter, or accompany me to the covert side and you will agree that beauty incarnate is still among us. Tell me if we are not rearing our young more wisely than did our lackadaisical grandmothers. Are we not cultivating graces of bodily motion, and sitting at the feet of hygienic science? How can the girls of yesteryear compare with the maidens firm of limb and sound in lung who know and appreciate the value of open air and exercise? Is coddling so rampant? Is a lady now afraid to walk a mile or two in stout boots, no matter what the weather? Think it over fairly and impartially, and I shall be surprised if you pass verdict that the allegation of declining beauty stands proven.

Yet another word on the subject. Mr. James Payn, in the Illustrated London News, is gallant enough to put in a word for the present-day girls. Whether, as beautiful as formerly or not, they surpass women of all other nations. A friend of his who is familiar with Circassia, tells him that the women of that country are not to be compared with our own for good looks. It is the picture outside the cream-pots which has misled the world. And it is certain, he adds, that eastern potentates who are, or who think themselves, connoisseurs in the matter, award the palm to the feminine population of these isles.

The constant inquiry of the shah of Persia, on both occasions when he was honored us with a visit, was "How much do you ask?" addressed to the fathers and husbands of the ladies he had a mind to purchase.

An Indian Trader tells his story of Kickapoo Indian Sagwa.

Cured of a Distressing Stomach Difficulty.

RUSHVILLE, NEB., June. 5

Some time ago after suffering severely with stomach trouble and dyspepsia, which had been greatly aggravated by the alkali water of the western country, and when I had reached that stage where I could frequently hold nothing on my stomach, and would even throw up water as soon as drank, I learned from a Sioux Indian, who had been on a visit to the Kickapoo tribe, of a wonderful remedy called "Sagwa." I got him to procure some for me. The effect was remarkable. I tried to get more from the Indian, but he would not let me have more of his. He prized it so much he would not give it up. I then learned that Healy & Bigelow, of New Haven, Conn., had an arrangement with the Kickapoo tribe, and was putting their remedies on the market. I sent and got a bottle of the Kickapoo Indian Sagwa, and found it to be the same as that I had procured from the Sioux Indian. I got more, and after the use of a few bottles, I was not only relieved but entirely cured, and have stayed cured ever since.

I can eat anything set before me. Salt bacon, which used to have a most distressing effect, I can now eat and relish like an Indian.

I cannot speak too highly of the Kickapoo remedies, and cheerfully recommend them to anyone.

If your nearest, best and most esteemed neighbors had written the following letters they could be no more worthy of your confidence than they now are, coming, as they do, from well known, intelligent and trustworthy citizens who, in their several neighborhoods, enjoy the fullest confidence and respect of all.

Mrs. F. L. Inman, of Manton, Wexford Co., Mich., whose portrait heads this article, writes as follows: "I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription about a year ago. For years I have suffered with falling and ulceration of the womb, but to-day, I am enjoying perfect health.

I took four bottles of the 'Prescription' and two of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Every lady suffering from female weakness should try the 'Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"

Miss Mary J. Tanner, North Lawrence, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., writes: "I was sick for four years. For two years I could do no work. I had five different physicians, who pronounced my case a poor or impoverished condition of the blood, and uterine trouble. I suffered a great deal with pain in both sides, and much tenderness on pressing over the womb. I bloated at times in my bowels and limbs; was troubled with leucorrhea. I could not sleep, and was troubled with palpitation of the heart. Suffered a great deal of pain in my head, temples, forehead and eyes. I had a troublesome cough, raised a great deal and at times experienced a good deal of pain in my chest and lungs. My voice at times was very weak. I suffered excruciating monthly, periodical pains. Since taking seven bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription some time ago, I have enjoyed better health than I have for more than four years previously; in fact, for several months past I have been able to work at sewing. I have gained in weight thirty-nine pounds since taking your medicines; the soreness and pain have disappeared." Yours truly,

Mary J. Tanner

Mrs. Alex. Robertson, of Half Rock, Mercer Co., Mo., writes: "For twenty years, I suffered with womb disease and most of the time I was in constant pain which rendered life a great burden. I cannot express what I suffered. I had eight doctors and all the medicine I had from them failed—the one after the other.

I was nervous, cold hands and feet, palpitation, headache, backache, constipation, leucorrhea and no appetite, with bearing-down pains. I got so weak I could not walk around. I had to keep my bed, thinking I would never get any better.

One day my husband got one of your little books and read it to me. He said there was nothing doing me any good. I said I would try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I did try it. After the first few weeks my appetite was better; I was able to sit up in bed. I wrote to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, at Buffalo, N. Y., and described my case; they sent me a book on women's diseases. I read carefully and followed the directions as near as I could and took the medicine for two years. With the blessing of God and your medicines, I am entirely cured. That was three years ago."

Yours truly,

Mrs Alex Robertson

COXEY IS ARRESTED

WARRANT SERVED WHEN HE APPEARED AT BROWNE'S HEARING.

He Furnishes Bail and, With Browne and Jones, Will Be Fined Later on the Charge of Violating a United States Statute.

Des Moines, May 4.—Kelly's army may break up here. The call issued to all laboring men asking them to meet and march to the capitol with the demand that Gov. Jackson secure a train brought unsatisfactory results. When the hour set for the march to the state house arrived only forty men were in line, but on the way more were added, and a total of 100 men climbed the long flight of stair steps and filed into the governor's reception room. Gen. Weaver marched at the head of the column and acted as master of ceremonies.

Gov. Jackson said that he had given the matter the gravest consideration. He referred to the events since the army reached Council Bluffs, and read a letter he had written to President Cable, of the Rock Island railroad, requesting that official to furnish a train to Davenport. President Cable replied that he would transport one-half of them if the St. Paul road would carry the other half. Later he said the offer of Mr. Cable was recalled. He then read requests he had made to all Iowa trunk lines, and the refusals from each road to carry the men for less than full fare. In conclusion Gov. Jackson said:

"I will lay this matter before the executive council of the state and see what can be done. There is only one hope, and that is of securing sufficient funds to carry these men to the Mississippi river unless Kelly will take a route down the river by way of Cincinnati."

A committee appointed to confer with Kelly found the general in a mood to accept almost any proposition.

"If I am furnished railroad transportation to the Mississippi," he said, "I will accept it gladly. I had expected to go by way of Chicago, but if I cannot I will do the next best thing. We can go down the river to the Ohio, and then follow that stream up toward Washington. By this means I am certain I can reach the national capital."

Gov. Jackson was informed of Kelly's decision, and immediately efforts will be made to get the men out of Des Moines. Many of the industrials had nothing but bread for breakfast, and only 200 pounds of meat were secured for dinner, but the citizens' committee said that by hard work they hoped to get sufficient food to last over to-morrow.

There seems small hope that the army will secure transportation out of Des Moines, and as the greater part of the men assert that they will walk no further, the authorities anticipate the breaking up of the army here. Gov. Jackson spent the day in endeavoring to secure a train to the Mississippi with a view to following his scheme, but has little hope of success.

Washington, May 5.—Jacob S. Coxey and his lieutenants, Carl Browne and Christopher Columbus Jones, were star attractions in the district police court where they were arraigned for violation of the capitol grounds act on May 1. The court room was filled with spectators, Populist members of congress constituting a notable part of the assemblage. Attorneys Hyman and Lipscombe appeared for the defendants in the preliminary proceedings and raised the issue of the constitutionality of the law under which their clients were arrested. Judge Miller, after arguments closed, overruled the objections of counsel for the defense to the information, the judge holding that the capitol grounds act was constitutional. He also denied Coxey a special trial. The trial may end this evening.

Des Moines, May 7.—Preparations for Kelly's final leave taking is under way. Early this morning lumber began to be delivered at a point below the confluence of the Des Moines and Racoon rivers. At 10 o'clock a detail of 300 men, mostly mechanics of more or less experience, picked out of the army, left the camp under the leadership of Gen. Kelly, marched three abreast to the place where the lumber had been delivered and began the work of building flat boats. On the way they sang "Marching Through Georgia," and while crossing the river struck up "There's one more river to cross." They set to work with great eagerness and before noon at least twenty-five boats were in process of building. Kelly explained that it was the first chance his men had had to work, and he was very proud of the impression they made in this role. The first boat was completed, pitched and was launched. Three cheers were given for the first evidence of the Kelly navy. After plying around for a short time Gen. Kelly and the two women who joined the army at Omaha got into the boat with four of his men as polemen, and, amid great cheering began the journey down the river to test its ability to float the navy. The trial trip was pronounced a success. To-morrow most of the boats will be finished. Meanwhile a committee is going ahead calling on the farmers and the people of towns near the river to meet them as they float down and supply them with food. The prospects are that the river will be lined with people and carriages all the way down, as the country is thickly settled and by prosperous people. Kelly expects to reach Ottumwa, about ninety miles down, on the evening of the second day, but he will hardly do so by the fourth day, according to good judges. There are many here who look upon the river journey as a piece of nonsense, and regard failure as the only possible outcome.

Washington, May 8.—The trial of the commonwealers continued to-day. Gen. Coxey testified and attempted to justify his course. A verdict will probably be rendered to-morrow.

Des Moines, May 8.—Kelly's army resumed work on the floats at the "navy yard" to-day. Sixty boats were ready last night except the calking and coating of pitch. Prof. King, who has been giving exhibitions here, will lead the flotilla out of the city on his aquatic bicycle, and announced he will probably continue at the head of the procession until the army reaches Keokuk, carrying Kelly's banner. Progress in the construction of the fleet is considerably retarded by the scarcity of proper tools.

Minnesota Contingent.

Alexandria, Minn., May 8.—Coxyites are here, with headquarters at the Arlington hotel: They are Engineer Wilson, his lieutenant and the steward. Only three industrials arrived from Fergus Falls at 6 o'clock last night, and there were besides only four recruits here, but several are hanging on as though undecided whether to enlist. Wilson readily talked. He says this is the twenty-third company he has organized. He and the lieutenant are busy securing recruits, which are turned over to "Scotty," the steward, a one-eyed man with a goatee, who puts them through without costs. Their destination is St. Cloud, where they claim that over 1,000 men are to meet. Their final rendezvous is St. Paul, from where, Wilson says, they will take a train through without stops to Washington with 3,000 men. They are not opposed here, but are encouraged, in the hopes of enlisting the element that can be easily spared.

Fergus Falls, Minn., May 8.—A Coxey organizer who was here with a wing of the army in an interview said that $5,000 was raised in Butte to help take the army which he was organizing from the West to the East. He says that other cities on the coast are raising large sums to send unemployed workingmen East. They care nothing about the effect that the movement is expected to have on legislation, but it is a cheap and popular way to return to the East a large army of men which floated West during the boom days on the coast, and which is now a drug in Western cities. While the organizer was here a prominent and wealthy man gave him a list of 104 undesirable citizens and offered him $10 per head for as many of them as he would take East, the money payable when he reached Pittsburg, so that the men will not drift back at once. The West has been getting dead beats and undesirable citizens of the East, and it is now shipping them back by the freight train load.

St. Paul, May 8.—The following resolution was presented at to-day's meeting of the chamber of commerce and referred to a committee:

"Whereas, Our country is being humiliated by the spectacle of numerous bodies of unemployed men from various localities marching to the national capital to coerce congress into passing measures for their relief. The worst feature of the movement is that it is a menace to law and order.

"Resolved, That in a friendly spirit we would advise these men to abandon their foolish and hopeless proceeding. The United States government has millions of acres of fertile land which it donates to actual settlers in quantities of 160 acres to every head of a family or single person above the age of twenty-one, and if they are disposed to work they can, by taking the benefit of the homestead law, attain competence, as thousands of others have done.

"Resolved, That the practice which has occurred in some instances of communities, municipal and state authorities lending the so-called Coxeyites facilities for their progress, unloading them as it were upon the next city or state, should be heartily condemned."

GOOD-BYE, CROKER.

Tammany's Chief Sachem Has Decided to Step Down and Out.

Washington, May 8.—Chief Croker's purpose of resigning from the head of Tammany was authoritatively made known to leading New York members of congress to-day in a telegram from Mr. Croker himself.

New York, May 8.—When the Tammany executive committee of sixty meets next Thursday Mr. Croker will take one more step toward withdrawal from active political work. Last summer he resigned from the Democratic state central committee. Now he is quoted by the Commercial Advertiser as saying:

"I have made up my mind that I cannot stand the strain and hard work connected with the management of the Tammany organization. It has grown so burdensome that at times it is more than any one can bear. Hereafter the routine and details must be looked after by committees, for I will not and cannot do it."

Defalcations in Brookings.

Huron, S. D., May 8.—Brookings is enjoying a sensation occasioned by the discovery that Steve Hirsch, who has had charge of the business of the Standard Drug company in that city is short in his accounts several hundred dollars. A short time since Hirsch concluded to go to Norway for the benefit of his wife's health. Not long after his departure the shortage in his accounts was discovered. An expert reports that the books were very cleverly doctored.

Must Keep Off From Gettysburg.

Gettysburg, Pa., May 8.—The directors of the electric railway on the battlefield have been advised by eminent counsel that they have no appeal from the decision of the government commission to condemn every portion of the railway on ground that was occupied by Federal and Confederate troops. Within a few weeks the trolley line will be taken up from "Hancock's front," "Little Round Top," and the "Valley of Death."

Opposed to Sugar Bounties.

Washington, May 8.—Representative Breckinridge of Arkansas, of the committee on ways and means, has introduced the following resolutions: "Resolved, that the committee on rules is hereby instructed to report a rule making it in order to amend any general appropriation bill so as to reduce or repeal the bounty and the tariff on sugar, or either of them."

La Moure's Successor.

Grand Forks, N. D., May 8.—Grant S. Hager, of the St. Thomas Times, to whom was delegated the duty by the Republican state central committee of naming the successor of Jud La Moure as a member of the committee, has selected Hon. John D. Wallace of Drayton to fill the vacancy. Mr. Wallace is a prominent Republican and a highly respected citizen of Pembina county. His appointment gives general satisfaction.

A. C. Phillips Wins His Case.

Sioux Falls, S. D., May 8.—The jury found the defendant in the suit of the Union Trust company vs. Arthur C. Phillips on a note of $3,000 entitled to a verdict. The defense was that the signature to the note was obtained by misrepresentation.

Killed by the Train.

Marshfield, Wis., May 8.—John Winkler, living a mile north of Rome, was struck by the south-bound train on the Wisconsin Central this morning and instantly killed.

MANY CHANGES MADE

NUMEROUS AMENDMENTS TO THE WILSON TARIFF BILL.

The Senate Committee Changes the Measure in Many Respects—Many Articles Taxed Which the House Bill Made Free.

Washington, May 8. — The principal changes made in the tariff bill by the amendments introduced in the senate as the result of the Democratic compromise are as follows:

The new sugar schedule provides that on and after Jan. 1, 1895, there shall be levied, collected and paid on all sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, and on all tank bottoms, syrups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem, and upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color there shall be levied, collected and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem; and all sugars, tank bottoms, syrups of cane juice, or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete or concentrated molasses which are imported from or are the product of any country which at the time the same are exported therefrom pays, indirectly or directly, bounty on the export thereof, shall pay a duty of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the foregoing rates, provided, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and Hawaii. That on Jan. 1, 1895, there shall be levied, collected and paid on molasses testing 40 degrees or less by the polariscope, and containing more than 20 per cent of moisture and on molasses testing above 40 degrees and not above 56 degrees, polariscope, a duty of 2 cents per gallon; if testing above 56 degrees, polariscope, a duty of 4 cents per gallon.

In the paragraph relating to fish the word "prepared" is stricken out and the rate of 25 per cent ad valorem is made to apply to all fish oils.

Tin plate, 1 1-5c per pound, restoring the house rate; senate bill 1 per cent.

The tobacco schedule is changed to read as follows: Wrapper tobacco, unstemmed, imported in any bale, box or package, or in bulk, $1.50 per pound; if stemmed, $2.25 per pound; house and senate bills, $1 and $1.25 respectively. Filler tobacco, unstemmed, imported in any bale, box, package or in bulk, 35 cents per pound; if stemmed, 50 cents per pound. Snuff and snuff flour manufactured of tobacco, ground dry or damp and pickled, scented or otherwise, 50 cents per pound; senate and house bills, 40 cents.

The cigar paragraph is amended as follows: Cigars, cigarettes, cheroots of all kinds, $4 per pound and 25 per cent ad valorem, and paper cigars and cigarettes, including wrappers, shall be subject to the same duties as are herein imposed on cigars. The duty on cigars in the house and senate bills is $3 per pound and 25 per cent.

Butter and substitutes therefor, 4 cents per pound, which is the house rate; senate bill, 20 per cent.

Cheese 4 cents per pound; senate and house bills, 25 per cent.

Milk, fresh, 3c per gallon; senate and house bills, free.

Broom corn, $6 per ton; senate and house bills, free.

Cabbages, 2 cents each; senate and house bills, free.

Eggs, 3 cents per dozen; senate and house bills, free.

Hay, $2 per ton; the house and senate rates, 20 per cent.

Honey, 10c per gallon, the house rate; senate, 20 per cent.

Hops, 8c per pound, the house rate; senate bill, 20 per cent.

Onions, 20c per bushel, the house rate; senate bill, 20 per cent.

Potatoes, 15c per bushel; senate bill, 30 per cent; house bill, 10c per bushel.

Meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved, not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent.

Lard, 1c per pound; taken from free list.

Poultry, house rate, not dressed, 2c per pound; dressed, 3c per pound, are restored; senate bill, 20 per cent.

Alcoholic preparations for medicinal purposes are relieved from the duty of $1.80 per gallon and made dutiable at 50c per pound.

In paragraph 276, woolen schedule, flocks, mungo, garnetted waist, embroidered noils or shoddy is inserted, and the rate is made 15 per cent ad valorem; senate and house bills, 25 per cent.

The date on which the reduction of rates provided for in manufactures of wools shall take effect is fixed for Jan. 1, 1895, instead of Dec. 2, 1894.

Added to the free list are the following: Dressed fur pieces suitable for use in the manufactures of hatters' fur.

In the free list after the words petroleum, crude or refined, is inserted the following:

Provided that if petroleum, crude or refined, is imported from any country which imposes a duty on the same exported from the United States, then there shall be levied, paid and collected upon such petroleum, crude or refined, the rate of duty existing prior to the passage of this act.

The following is added to the paragraph in the free list relating to agricultural implements: "Provided that all articles mentioned in this paragraph, if imported from a country which lays an import duty on like articles imported from the United States shall be subject to the duties existing prior to the passage of this act."

There is a modification of the provision to the same effect in the senate bill.

The same addition regarding sulphuric acid is made as the one above mentioned in reference to agricultural implements.

Gotham's Bridge Bill Passed.

Washington, May 8.—The New York and New Jersey bridge bill was passed in the house under suspension of the rules.

Preferred Drowning.

Yankton, S. D., May 8.—John Brasch, a patient at the insane asylum, escaped this morning. He was pursued, when he ran into the Missouri river and was drowned. Brasch was sent from the soldiers' home. He has two sons living in Rapid City.

Bishop Whipple a Friend of the Red

Washington, May 8.—Bishop Whipple has written to Minnesota congressmen urging them to vote against the abolishment of five Indian schools in Minnesota.

RIOTING AT ASHLAND.

Fight Between ore Handlers and Policemen.

Ashland, Wis., May 8.—Mayor Hubbell swore in as special police twenty-one men who are followers of Charles King, the man who has contracts with several boats to trim ore at 2 1-2 cents, which is 1-2 cent less than union men are receiving for trimming. These specials intended to go to the docks to-morrow and trim ore, having police powers and authority to carry arms. It was expected that union men would not dare to offer them violence. This act of Mayor Hubbell's in swearing in these men as special police angered the union ore trimmers to such an extent that 400 of them congregated in Bay City and marched to the residence of Mayor Hubbell with the avowed intention of doing violence to him. The crowd could not find Hubbell at his residence and came back down town. Here they were met by half a dozen special policemen, who had been appointed by Hubbell, and for a few minutes a free fight resulted. No one was seriously hurt, and the policemen arrested one of the crowd. Trouble is looked for to-morrow.

Washington Gossip.

Washington, May 8. — Neem Nelson and Eric Younger were to-day removed as postmasters of Gardensville, Freeborn county, and Rock Creek, Pine county, respectively, and Cook Robinson and John Gilman appointed.

The secretary of the interior to-day approved the petition for a survey of town 160, range 39, in the eastern end of Kittson county. There are no available funds and it may be several months before the survey is made.

Congressman Boen has put his proposition for a $10,000 appropriation for a survey of the Red river into the form of a bill which he introduced to-day.

The Nicollet National Bank of Minneapolis was to-day approved as reserve agent of the First National of Winona.

Strong Winds.

Aberdeen, S. D., May 8.—The weather in this portion of South Dakota is in striking contrast to that enjoyed in the Twin Cities for the past few days. Strong winds have dried out the soil so that a moderate opening of nature's flood gates would be very acceptable. Grain is not suffering for the want of rain as yet, but almost every one envied the farmers of Minnesota when they heard of the rain that had fallen there recently. Crops are now looking splendid. To-day is warm with a strong southwest wind.

The Yellow Gold.

Glendive, Mont., May 8.—Great excitement prevails over the gold discovery forty miles northwest of here on the Big Dry. Outfits are leaving for the new mining camp daily. The place has been christened Alexander City. Z. W. Alexander, an old miner who has spent several years hunting for the mine and, who at last succeeded in finding it, is moving lumber and machinery. A saloon has been opened in a log shack and a stage line opened to Glasgow. Several specimens are on exhibition at Glasgow. Everybody is rushing for claims.

Honoring the Maid of Orleans.

Orleans, France, May 8.—A large number of American and English visitors have arrived here in order to take part in the Joan of Arc celebration. Many wreaths were placed to-day upon the statue erected in honor of the Maid of Orleans. This is the anniversary of the day upon which Joan of Arc succeeded in 1420 in raising the siege of Orleans. The city had been besieged by the English under the earls of Salisbury and Suffolk since Oct. 12, 1428.

Rescued Imperiled Tourists.

Gratz, Austria, May 8.—A diver this morning succeeded in reaching the party of tourists who have been imprisoned in the stalacite cavern at Spurach, since Saturday, April 28, owing to a sudden rise in the water, and the fact that the passage to it became blocked with timbers and boulders. The diver found all seven of the tourists alive. It was at first believed that eight people were imprisoned.

Coxeyites Must Pay Full Fare.

Pueblo, Colo., May 8.—The Missouri Pacific railroad refuses transportation east to the Cripple Creek industrial army, which numbers about 400, unless full fare is paid. Gen. Sanders says they will go to Washington if they have to walk.

Big Loss From Storm.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., May 8.—Later reports show that yesterday's storm will cause a loss of over $100,000 in this county. The big coal breaker at Maltby was badly damaged, as was also Simpson & Watkins' breakers, near Wyoming. The loss of these two structures alone will reach $20,000.

Gored by a Bull.

London, May 8.—John Austin Chamberlain, eldest son of the Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M. P., was attacked by a bull on his father's farm, near Birmingham. Young Mr. Chamberlain was thrown to the ground by the enraged animal and his leg badly gored.

Bank Statement Called for.

Washington, May 8.—The controller of the currency has called for statements showing the condition of the various national banks of the country at the close of business on Friday, May 4.

A. O. U. W.

Watertown, S. D., May 8.—The city is full of delegates for the grand lodge session of the A. O. U. W., which convenes to-morrow. There will be about 200 delegates and a two days' session.

Defaulter Lohman's Sentence.

Brooklyn, N. Y., May 8.—William D. Lohman, the defaulting cashier of the Brooklyn excise department, was sentenced to seven years and four months' imprisonment in Sing Sing.

Bayard Goes to Ireland.

London, May 8.—The Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, the United States ambassador, and Mrs. Bayard, will leave London on Friday next for Dublin in order to spend a few days at the castle as the guest of Lord Houghton, the lord lieutenant of Ireland.

Modern Museum in Ancient Egypt.

Alexandria, Egypt, May 8.—The council of ministers has granted the sum of £150,000 with which to erect a solid building at Cairo to replace the Chizes museum.

WORK OF CONGRESS

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, May 4. — Maj. Baldwin took a hand in the debate on the river and harbor bill to-day. He and Congressman Haugen are opposing certain provisions which the committee have inserted in the bill regulating the size of log rafts to be towed on the great lakes. Congressman Stephens of Michigan, who owns one or more saw mills on open water, is a member of the committee, and Baldwin thinks he is back of the proposition to limit the size of the rafts to 50x300 feet, aided and abetted by the lake carriers' association, for which body Maj. Baldwin has not a very high opinion. The two members representing the head of the lakes called on Chairman Catchings, of the rivers and harbors committee, yesterday, but were coldly received, and were assured that the committee would stand by the bill. To-day, however, after Maj. Baldwin had assured the house that the combined lumber interests of Duluth and Superior were greater than those of any other point in the country, and must have consideration, and that the law, if enacted, could not and would not be obeyed in Duluth harbor, a more relenting spirit was shown, and the matter was allowed to go over until an amendment prepared by the Duluth lumbermen could be received and considered.

The senate resumed consideration of the tariff bill, Senators Chandler and Quay making speeches in opposition to the bill.

Washington, May 5.—It has been arranged that the tariff debate shall be adjourned until next week, the interval being spent by the senate in executive business. Neither Democrats nor Republicans care to debate the bill until it is placed before the senate in the form contemplated by the caucus agreement. Senator Vest to-day offered amendments to the tariff-income-tax bill, providing for a change in the income tax feature of the bill. It does not change the tax of 2 per cent, nor the amount at which incomes should be subject to tax, leaving it at $4,000 and upward. The object of the amendments is to relieve individual investors in corporations of the charge where their incomes do not exceed $4,000, but to have the profits of the corporations taxed. It is also proposed to eliminate the inquisitorial features of the income tax. Instead of compelling the individual to exhibit his books and papers, the assessors may estimate the amount of the income, and the person so assessed may appear and prove that he has been assessed too high, if such is the case.

Congressmen Baldwin and Haugen scored a clever move to-day in the passage of the river and harbor bill, the effect of which will be to bind the government to the policy of deepening the harbors of the principal cities of the great lakes to twenty feet to correspond with the Soo canal. To the appropriation for Duluth and Superior harbors was added a clause directing the secretary of war to make estimates and surveys for twenty-foot harbors at the head of the lake. This policy was considered preferable to a futile attempt to get an increase of appropriation. Duluth and Superior get $70,000. Mr. Boen attempted to have his $10,000 appropriation for a survey and estimate for the improvement of the Red river added to the bill, but failed. He expects to have it added in the senate, however.

Washington, May 7.—Immediately after the reading of the journal the senate proceeded to the consideration of bills on the calendar. A bill for the relief of the citizens of Oregon, Idaho and Washington, who served in the United States troops in the war against the Nez Perces and the Bannock and Shoshone Indians, and the heirs of those killed in that service, was passed. One or two unimportant private bills were passed after which Mr. Hunton (Dem., Va.) again called up the bill to remit the penalties on the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius, which he has made ineffectual efforts to have passed for several days. Mr. Chandler opposed it as a "one-sided and losing business for the government," but it was passed.

The house to-day took up the government printing office bill.

Washington, May 8.—The house began business to-day by making some committee provision for the newly elected members of the house. The New York and New Jersey bridge bill was passed under a suspension of the rules on motion of Mr. Dunphy. A special order was adopted making the bills for the erection of the new government printing office and a new hall of records in the city of Washington the business of the house which can be disposed of. The printing office bill was discussed, but the debate degenerated into a tariff discussion and Mr. Milliken of Maine delivered an amusing speech arraigning the Democratic party for bringing on the financial depression which the country has been suffering.

The open session of the senate lasted but half an hour to-day and was devoid of all public interest save the introduction by Senator Allen of Nebraska, who is defending Coxey and his lieutenants in the police court, of a resolution for the appointment of a special committee of five senators to investigate the alleged clubbing by the Washington police of the Coxey people.

Avenged a Sister.

Richland Center, Wis., May 8.—In a shooting affray in Ithaca Saturday night Stephen Schmitz was shot dead and John Sullivan and Jerry Dedrich were seriously wounded. The shooting was done by Charles and Fred Hodges, who claimed that Sullivan had slandered their sister. Schmitz and Dedrich interfered in Sullivan's behalf. The Hodges are in jail here.

Storm Was Destructive.

Red Wing, Minn., May 8.—Saturday's storm was very violent in the southern part of the county, and in all probability $15,000 worth of property was destroyed by wind and hail. Damage to the home and farm of Fred Schultz alone amount to $6,000.

Terrific Gale.

Ashland, Wis., May 8.—A terrific gale is blowing on Lake Superior. It started last night and has increased to the worst storm of the season. Many telegraph wires are down.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the St, Hilaire Townsite Co. will prosecute any person who hereafter haul any rubbage or macure on any land belonging to said company in the village of St. Hilaire.

April 25th 1894
St, Hilaire Townsite Co.
H. E. Ives, agent,

We are being favored with another rain today.

D, A, Turner, of Crookston, was in town today.

What is the matter with the St, Hilaire Gun Club.

Miss Inga Rude is visiting friends in town this week.

C, A, Brink was at Crookston on business last week.

Traveling men have been numerous in town the past week,

Everyone seems to be busy making a garden this spring.

The country roads are said to be getting passable again.

Frank Gravel, of Crookston, was doing business in town today.

Frank Hunt, of Red Lake Falls, was doing business here yesterday.

Our merchants have been receiving considerable new goods the past week.

Division Superintendent Ponsonby, of the Great Northern, was in town today.

Farmers have all been busy seeding the past week and business has been quiet.

It is rumored that the village council held a meeting some time the first of the week.

Miss Mary Kyle, of Crookston, has commenced teaching in the district north of here.

The high winds last week must have been responsible for the loss of J. L. Johnson's whiskers.

Miss Sampson, of Crookston, has been in town several days this week taking orders for millinery.

The high winds the past week have aided greatly in drying up the land and nearly all the fields are now dry enough to seed.

It will now be in order for the farmers living along the line of the Great Northern to strike for better service and cheaper freight rates.

The ladies of the Norwegian Lutheran Church will give a social on Thursday evening May 17th, All are cordially invited to attend.

Our streets are now in fairly good condition, Broadway has been dragged a couple of times this week and is now in passable condition.

The Red River Dalen, the Norwegian paper at Crookston will be moved to East Grand Forks and will be run in the interest of county division.

Seeding has been progressing rapidly the past week and fully seventy-five per cent of the wheat is now in the ground. Very little wheat will be sown after this week.

John Locken, of Crookston, formerly register of deeds of Polk county, died of consumption last Monday. Mr. Locken had many warm friends in the county who will be sorry to learn of his death.

Economy is the watchword and it is rumored that Street Commissioner Harris will lose his position of holding an umbrella over the council proceedings on the roof of the jail, The council have decided to purchase a glass case to put them in hereafter.

Several of the small boys in town have been busy the past week putting set lines in the river to catch fish. True to the spirit of the age they held a meeting and formed a combination, and they will all sell fish at the same price. No cut rates, no competition, the trust will control the fish market of St. Hilaire.

Two hundred thousand immigrants arrived in the United States during the eight months ending February 28th 1894, being only seventeen thousand less than for the same period of the year previous. Considering the fact that business was depressed as never before, this showing is strange to say the least. We have thousands of men without work and it seems poor policy to encourage immigration under the circumstances,

Is there an over production of wheat when the western farmers feed it to the hogs and thousands are short on bread? Is there an over production of cotton when it will not pay for its raising in the south and a million people are in rags? No. It is only evidence of an over production of darned fools. That's all.—Southern Mercury,

Advices from Euclid inform us that the many friends of Prof. F. H. Gambell formerly of this city, are pushing that gentleman to the front as a candidate for county superintendent. Mr. Gambell is well qualified for the office a perfect gentleman and one whose nomination would do credit to any party,—McIntosh Times.

Punch a hole in a silver dollar and you punch out all the fiat in it, now about 63 cents worth. Your punched dollar will bring you the market value of the silver in it, now about 47 cents worth, Punch a greenback dollar full of holes and it is still worth 100 cents, for the faith of the government is back of every cent of it and it will be paid in gold.—Intelligencer, Wheeling.

The blow has fallen and Coxey is a prisoner. He made a terrible mistake and has committed a horrible crime. Just think of it! The cold-blooded wretch has actually been convicted in a Washington court of carrying a banner and walking on the grass! It is horrible to contemplate and hard to believe that any sane man would commit so atrocious a crime, It is a wonder that he was not immediately lynched by the infuriated people. It is safe to say that in any other city he would never come to trial.

Many crimes have been and are still being committed at Washington. Congressmen have repeatedly been bought and sold to betray their trusts and men of the Breckenridge stripe are as thick as black birds in a cornfield. Professional lobyists openly solicit congressmen to vote away the public revenue and the rights of the people. But let it be understood, henceforth, that so long as a drop of blood remains in a Washington policeman's body, so long will all citizens who walk on the grass be promptly thrown into prison.

Mr, W. H. Neal who is a practical miner and well known at St. Vincent who teamed timber from the Roseau last winter called at this office on Wednesday with specimens of lighite. Mr. Neal two weeks ago was in Hallock where he met Mr, T X Falcon who supposed he had found coal deposits in the Lake of the Woods region, Messrs. Neal, Falcon and Howe who with Mr, C. DeJarley comprise the firm, started once for the location, which is Buffalo point 70 miles east of St. Vincent where they found immense deposits of coal. They located four quarter sections on the U. S. side of the International boundary line and 12 sections on the Canadian side. Mr, Neal started yesterday for Stephen to get a test augur and he says they will be shipping coal in June.—St. Vincent New Era,

We learn from good authority that J. J. Hill refused absolutely to settle the recent difficulty between the Great Northern and the employees unless Agent Freeman would get his whiskers pushed at once, and sign an agreement to the effect that they would never again be allowed in public places or on company property. Debs stood out for the whiskers but when Mr. Hill explained that they were being grown and cared for on company's time and a precedent would be established that would eventually ruin the company Debs agreed to submit the matter to arbitration. In the meantime Freeman learned the facts and rather than run any chances of injuring the cause of labor, wired Debs that the whiskers would come off as soon as he could talk the barber into trusting him until his salery was raised. Everything must have been settled satisfactory for the strike is settled, the whiskers are out of sight and the barber seems to be only one not entirely satisfied.

The Populist committee met at the auditor's office at ten o'clock today for the purpose of naming the date of the county convention. Nine out of the twelve members were present. It was decided to leave the call of the convention to Chairman Webster, owing to the fact that the exact date of the state convention is not known. The county convention will be held about ten days before the state convention. The committee agreed that county convention would consist of 183 delegates At that time delegates to the state congressional and legislative conventions will be named, thus transacting all the business at one time. The following are the out-of-town members of the committee present to-day: Albert Wickstrom, Bray; E. A. Sweet, Fisher; Paul Lorenson, Bygland; Hans Sampson, Fosston; Ole Christianson, Lowell: John Uleath, Russia.—Crookston Times,

The press that is deriding the idea of a large gathering of People at capitals in order to influence legislation show great ignorance of history, Only last year when the Belgian congress had buried the general suffrage bill and it was universally conceded that it could not be passed, the Belgian miners gathered in Brussels and those legislators changed their minds. Over 30 years ago a general uprising of the people of Sweden and their going to Stockholm brought about the concessions then generally demanded. The corn laws of England were repealed by the force of public sentiment expressed by a large gathering of the people in London, Nearly 400 years ago "Crazy John Law" led a petition with boots on of several thousand English peasants to London and secured important concessions to the people. Within the past year the bankers of Wall Street have gathered in Washington several times to secure legislation in their interests, and the National Boards of Trade held a national convention in order to influence legislation. All manufacturing trusts have their special agents there, and the corporation lobbyists is not a stranger around national and state legislatures. It is universally conceded that the government—either by action or inaction—is responsible for the present condition. The democrats lay it to bad republican laws; the republicans to the democratic administration; the Peoples party to both the old parties, and those who understand political economy, to the general ignorance of the people on these questions; and that they have placed politicians and party before principles and have been too timid in asserting their rights.—Alliance Advocate.

The bank governed, trust managed daily papers of the great cities, whose editors wouldn't know a bull calf from a black nosed sheep—don't know whether potatoes grow on the top or bottom end of the vines, are howling themselves hoarse over "diversified farming." We have in mind a so-called agricultural paper of the Twin Cities which intimates that farmers who do not diversify are either fools or criminals; and the editor of this great (?) sheet, so apt with the scissors and the paste-pot, reverberates the mighty thunders of the daily press and does the bidding of his masters who "touch the button and he does the rest.

There is a hidden purpose behind these persistent howls that does not seem to have been discovered by the reform press, but it is so apparent that we can't see why it has remained so long unexposed, the scheme to reduce the farmer and all who produce the necessaries, luxuries of life will not be realized by reducing the price of wheat, corn, cotton and meat. Man can't live on "bread alone" nor be clothed comfortably with cotton fabric, and to bring the cruel scheme out in all its hideous fullness, all the products of the earth must be subjected to the squeeze;—and when the farmer under the benificent management of these "curb-stone" agricultural pedagogues, has a surplus of all food products and is bidding and wrangling for a place in the huckster shops of the great cities for his butter at 8 to 10 cents a pound and his eggs at five cents a dozen and his chickens and turkeys are scarcely worth dressing and every product of the farm and garden reduced to its equivalent in forty cent wheat (gold), then you will be able to see the animus of the greedy plunderer who is preaching to you the beauties and the profits of "diversified farming.

Diversified farming is desirable and profitable, but at the present time it is not practicable in the northwest to the extent claimed or advocated by these self styled farmers True diversification consists in producing your own food, and manufacturing enough to meet your own wants. Raise your own pork, beef chickens, turkeys, eggs, potatoes and all other vegitables and by all means make your own butter and pickles, Keep a few sheep, enough to furnish clothing for your own family and when the fleece is shorn, instead of carrying it to town and selling it for ten cents a pound (half its value) work it into cloth at home for your family use, the protected manufacturer will not like this and will kick of course and laugh at you for wearing "homespun" but let him kick you can stand it as long as he can and while he and his other protected friends are protesting you can look on in your home made clothes and grow fat and rich upon home-grown products, By all means diversify, but do it for your own interests; and when some of your brethern, whose farms and souls are the property of the banker and whose pen runs under "supervision," writes of the beauties of diversified farming, ask him how much sweat and tears it cost him to write such bosh to please his greedy master. By all means diversify not only in farming but in thought and action, and if you are not so closely bound to the car of mammon that to extricate yourself is death, diversify your politics and once again show these arrogant fellows that you are a MAN,

How a Girl of Dramatic Instincts Took a Part.

"Mercy on us!" cried Elaine's dearest friend as she bound into the room and deposited her bundles on a chair, "you look very nice today, and, yes, there is a bunch of roses on the table. Somebody has evidently been here. Who was he, and what are you laughing at?"

"Oh, oh, it was too funny. I shall die, I know I shall," and she flew off into a fresh paroxysm of laughter.

"You might as well tell me about it," remarked her friend in an injured tone. "I've got to go to the dentist tomorrow, and the sleeves of my gown are not nearly large enough, so I need cheering up."

"Well, you see—ha, ha, ha! The old hired girl has left, and the new one can't come until Monday, so I have been busy all day helping mamma. I had just finished tidying the parlors awhile ago and gone up stairs when I heard the doorbell ring. I was sure it was you, and as I had something to tell you—I've forgotten what it was, but it was something important—I flew down to open the door. And, oh, Elsie, there was Dick Van Snelle!"

"You don't mean it?"

"I do. And, oh, you should have seen me! My face was dirty, I had on an old wrapper, and my head was tied up in a towel. Oh, I thought I'd simply die."

"And no wonder!"

"I stood there only a minute, but it seemed hours, and then he asked if Miss Elaine was in. It flashed over me instantly that he was so nearsighted he had failed to recognize me in my disarray, so I just courtesied and said, 'Will yez plaze to walk in, sorr, and I'll be after tellin her yez want to see her.'"

"Well, you are a wonder! That all comes of your amateur theatricals. I'll never make fun of them again."

"Well, I just flew up stairs, got into an afternoon gown and sailed down, smiling sweetly and apologizing for the new maid, and he never once suspected."

"You don't say so! But perhaps he was only pretending?"

"No, he wasn't, for he laughed and told me what a fright she was."

"You don't mean it! What did you"—

"Oh, I replied meekly that that was just the reason we were sending her away."—Chicago Tribune.

Some Essentials to Newspaper Success.

"I have come to New York to start a daily paper," said an editor from the interior to an experienced friend in the metropolis, "and I want your advice. What material will I need?"

"Well, in the first place," said his friend, "you must buy or hire a steamboat."

"Good gracious! exclaimed the editor. "What use will I have for a steamboat?"

"To give fresh air excursions, of course. No New York newspaper of any account at all is without a fresh air excursion. They don't care a snap of the finger about the people who are benefited, but it has come to be an advertising necessity."

"But I thought that ability in the editorial department would"—

"All nonsense, I tell you. The ability you want is the ability to puff yourself. Then you must help boom some monument fund that is languishing and aid in swelling foreign election funds—anything that will keep you talked about."

"But couldn't an able writer"—

"Able writer! The ablest writer you employ must be the one who can write the ablest certificates with regard to your enormous and greatly increasing circulation to be sworn to before an able notary. There's where ability comes in. If you want to succeed with a newspaper in New York, just follow my advice, that's all."—Texas Siftings.

Hubby Foots the Bills.

The man who is hanging to a strap in a cable car often hears conversations which are worth repeating.

"Don't you hate to have to ask your husband for money to buy your dresses and hats with?" said a matron in dark green to one in seal brown.

"I never do," was the reply.

"Don't you? Does he give it to you without asking?"

The matron in seal shook her head.

"Have you a regular allowance, or does he pay you a weekly salary, as some women maintain is the correct thing?"

"Neither."

"Then you must have private means of your own to draw on, but every woman is not so well situated as that."

"Wrong again. I have no fortune of my own, and my husband pays for everything I use."

"Then how do you manage it if you never ask him for money and he never gives you any without asking?"

"Oh, I simply order what I want and have the things charged."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Her Size.

This amusing little story comes from Gallipolis. In that nice little city on the Ohio lives a dusky damsel whose mouth is abnormally large. It is the custom of the maiden to sleep with a horseshoe under her pillow, imagining that it brings her luck. The other night she went to bed, with the horseshoe in its accustomed place. Before she went to sleep she removed her false teeth and placed them beside the shoe. The next morning she put the horseshoe in her mouth and did not discover the mistake for two days.—West Union (O.) Scion.

My Poems.

My "Hope" and "Faith" bought a modish gown,
My "Longings" a decentish hat.
My "Fond Heart" went for the latest in gloves,
And my "Moods" for this and that.

My "Song of Peace" meant a stylish wrap.
I squandered my "Spring" for a muff
And spent every cent of my "Hoarded Gold"
For the quaintest, furriest ruff.

And still my wardrobe is incomplete—
O ye editors—cruel cranks—
For the "Sonnet" that ought to furnish shoes
Has been thrice "returned with thanks."

HE HAD THEM.

A Story of Mark Twain That May or May Not Be True.

This is a story about Mark Twain told by a Hartford man in an up town cafe the other night. It may not be entirely new to every one, but even if it isn't it is good enough to bear repetition.

One beautiful summer morning a few years ago Mark wandered out before breakfast, unconventionally attired in a smoking jacket and slippers and unadorned with either collar or necktie. The humorist is proverbially careless as to his dress, and if it were not for his faithful wife would be as likely as not to appear in public in this garb most of the time.

A few doors from Mr. Clemens' house lives the aged authoress of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." On this particular morning as Mark strolled by Mrs. Stowe's residence he espied the old lady seated upon the veranda. He pushed open the gate, walked in and made a very enjoyable quarter of an hour's call. Then he lounged back to breakfast.

During the progress of the meal he casually alluded to his call upon Mrs. Stowe.

"You don't mean to say that you went into Mrs. Stowe's house in that condition, do you?" ejaculated his despairing wife.

"What condition?" asked Mark blankly.

"Why, without any collar or necktie. What will Mrs. Stowe think of you? You'll have to go over and apologize to her just as soon as you can make yourself presentable."

"All right, my dear," said the crestfallen humorist meekly, "but I don't think she noticed anything out of the way. She didn't speak of it."

A few moments later, breakfast having been finished, Mark disappeared in the direction of the dressing room and shortly afterward dispatched one of his children upon some mysterious errand in which a small parcel played a part.

The child presently returned bearing a note, which Mark after reading carried in triumph to his wife.

"It's all right, my dear," he said, referring to the note. "Mrs. Stowe says she is always glad to see me, even without the customary neckwear, and begs me not to mention the circumstance."

"What have you done now?" queried Mrs. Clemens in a tone of hopeless resignation.

"Why," drawled out the humorist, "I sent my collar and necktie over to Mrs. Stowe, so she would know that I really owned them. You may rest assured now, my dear, that it's all right. She is satisfied, I am sure, that I do have collars and neckties about the house 'somewhere.'"—Washington Star.

Fraternity.

The moon was just rising from a bank of dense clouds as the burglar reached through the hole he had made in the back door and raised the latch.

He had scarcely crossed the threshold when he started violently.

"Aha!" he muttered.

It was not so much his words as his manner.

For an instant his eyes rested hungrily upon the glittering silverware.

Then his glance wandered to the plumbers' tools that were scattered about the floor.

"No," he muttered. "This is another man's job, and I don't take the bread out of his mouth."

Retracing his steps, he was soon lost to view.—Detroit Tribune.

A GENUINE ROMANCE.

This Is How It Happens In Real Life—A Story of a Young Man and a Girl.

This is a story of a young man and a girl.

The girl was pretty. The young man thought she was the most beautiful being he had ever seen.

He met her in the house of a friend in the village in which she lived. He was dazed. He followed her around the entire evening He tried to make an impression, and when he came away he thought he had impressed her, and he was in the seventh heaven of delight.

He came back to Buffalo. He talked of the girl by day and dreamed of her by night. Business kept him from going again to the village which held the radiant being within its corporate limits. He did not know her well enough to write to her. He moped. His eyes grew dim. He was as sorely stricken with love as a man could be and maintain anything like his mental poise.

Last week one day he heard that she was in this city visiting friends. He was wild with delight. A day later a friend of the friends with whom the divinity was staying came to him and said that he thought he could fix things so the stricken young man could take the southern tier girl to the theater. The young man implored him to do so, and he did.

In the days between the theater going and the first arrangements the young man lived in a dream. He invited a married friend and his wife to go along and act as chaperons. They said they would. He looked his dress clothes over carefully, had them cleaned and pressed, bought a new pair of gloves and fixed himself up regardless of cost.

The night came. The young man went after the girl with a carriage. It was the best one he could hire. He had the four best seats in the theater. They saw the play, and he took them to the swellest cafe in town and had luncheon. He ordered champagne like a California millionaire.

Then they drove home. The girl talked of inconsequential matters. She had liked the play. She told the young man that she would be in the city a month longer. They reached the house of her friends. He helped her out of the carriage, and she tripped up the steps, said "Good night" sweetly and vanished behind the heavy doors.

The young man got in the carriage and drove back to the city. He was so full of the image of the girl that he was down town before he had time to think of anything else. Then one extraneous thought did come to him. He sat up straight in the carriage and swore a big, triangular oath.

She had not asked him to call!

He got out of the carriage and went into a hotel. He sought the reading room and seized a sheet of paper. Then he put down these figures in a row:

Carriage.. $3[illegible]
Tickets.. 4
Luncheon.. 15
Gloves.. 2
Incidentals.. 5
Total.. [illegible]

He held that slip of paper in his hand for a long time and gazed at it earnestly, not to say sadly. Finally he rose, and as he did he said hoarsely, "Well, I got the gloves back anyhow."—Buffalo Express.

A Slow Task.

Lieutenant Schwatka, in describing some of the trees near Sonora, says that the iron wood looks very much like a fine variety of the mesquite, the wood of which is a beautiful, bright cherry red. Its name is derived from its hardness and is well deserved. It uses up an ax to fell each tree, and as the quality of different trees is always the same and that of different axes is not, even this ratio of one ax to one tree has to be changed occasionally and always in favor of the tree.

It is said that a tramp who had wandered into that part of the country, with the usual appetite of his class, applied for something to eat. In reply he was told that if he would get out a certain number of rails for a fence the proprietor would give him a week's board.

It was, as he thought, about a day's work that had been assigned him, and bright and early the next morning he sallied out with his ax on his shoulder. Unfortunately the most tempting tree he met was an iron wood, and very late in the evening he returned with the ax helve on his arm.

"How many rails did you split today?" asked his employer.

"I didn't split any, but I hewed out one," was the reply, and then the tramp resigned his position.—Youth's Companion.

"He Laughs Best Who Laughs Last."

A young British soldier was conducting a party from the United States over the citadel at Quebec. One member of the party was a small maid of 9, and to her the young soldier devoted most of his attention. She was a saucy child, full of enthusiasm and blessed with the earnest, aggressive patriotism of extreme youth.

"Here," said the soldier as they stood before two worn brass cannon, "are two guns we took from your people at the battle of Bunker Hill." And he smiled in triumph.

Nonplused for a moment, the child was still; then she looked up. "Come home with me," she said softly, "and I'll show you a whole country we took away from your people about the same time."—Life.

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

Her Name Never Printed.

It looks as though social notoriety is not to be the fate of one Washington woman whose name for some inscrutable reason for the last half-dozen years has been omitted from all published accounts of gatherings in which she has taken part. An overmastering curiosity finally prompted her to institute an investigation into the matter, says the Post. She then found that, so far from the omission having been intentional on the parts of the correspondents, it arose from the fact that she was personally unknown even by sight to them. Having satisfied herself on this score, the incognito shortly thereafter ordered her carriage, and, calling for a friend, took her for a drive. The little excursion, planned for pleasure, had a most disastrous termination, as the horses, taking fright, ran away and, getting beyond the control of the coachman, the vehicle was overturned and both ladies injured, the owner of the carriage quite seriously. In the midst of her pain as she was being carried home there flashed through her mind the thought that the runaway would be given space in the papers. Then, as the turn-out was her property, her name would of necessity figure in the account. The following morning a detailed account of the accident appeared in the paper, but by a strange fatality that has for so long ruled her elimination from print, her name was not mentioned. That of her companion was several times repeated in the article, which wound up by stating that "a friend who was in the carriage at the time was also injured."

Lord Rosebery's Best Characteristic.

The best characteristic of Lord Rosebery is the least known and it is one of which I hesitate to write. It would, however, be a wrong to the public to refrain from calling attention to the fact that although Lord Rosebery does not read lessons in his parish church, he is as much dominated by the religious instinct as Mr. Gladstone himself. No one is more conscientious among lay or clerical statesmen of our day. No one, not even Mr. Gladstone himself, scrutinizes more closely the moral aspects of all his policies and all his acts. No one would claim Lord Rosebery as one of the conventional ecclesiastical Christians of his day. But so far as fearing God and working righteousness goes there are few who dwell so much in their taskmaster's eye as the young peer upon whom has descended the mantle of Mr. Gladstone.—From W. T. Stead's article, "The Three English Liberal Leaders," in the Review of Reviews.

Money in Sheep Raising.

There is money in sheep raising in England, and there should certainly be some in the United States. The Englishman has not only free wool, but free trade in every department of forming, yet his sheep are his protection against bankruptcy. The difference lies in the fact that in England there is great painstaking in the sheep industry. Nothing is too good for the flock, which is given the best food, care and shelter. As a result, mutton is highly esteemed there, as it deserves to be, for special pains have been bestowed on its sweetness and flavor.

In the United States, on the other hand, little or nothing has been done, for sheep. These animals will bear a good deal of neglect and still live, though they will not thrive; hence the farmers have proceeded to test the popular theory that a sheep will live on nothing, by making it a general weed and thistle exterminator. Such food does not conduce to fine flavored mutton, which explains the unpopularity of that meat. Now the farmers are realizing this, a superior article is coming on the market, and there is no reason why mutton eating should not increase to ten times its present volume.

Labor Scare in Southern Russia.

For some reason which is not apparent, in a country where distress is extreme and the number of unemployed enormous, the demand for labor in the coal mines of south Russia is greatly in excess of the supply. It is impossible to procure sufficient labor to work the mines for the supplying of barest needs, and railways, factories and many other industrial interests are suffering seriously for lack of coal. Indeed, the people of the Don district are greatly inconvenienced by lack of coal for domestic uses. The owners have orders on hand for great quantities of coal, which they are entirely unable to supply. A conference under government auspices was held a few days ago, and it was decided to try and attract labor to the mines by making grants of public lands to the miners.—New York Sun.

HOUSEHOLD TREASURE.

Growing Popularity of the Oxford Sewing Machines.

There is nothing more truly a household treasure than a good sewing machine. To be without it is to be willfully deprived of the immense advantage of one of the greatest of all inventions. A machine once bought is a perpetual treasure. It demands no wages, occasions no expense or trouble, and is always ready without a moment's notice to render the work of the laborious housewife tenfold more efficient and expeditious. Some machines combine the best ideas and suggestions which have been so abundantly introduced in this remarkable mechanism.

A machine which exhibits in liberal combination all the best features introduced is the Oxford sewing machine made by the Oxford Manufacturing company, Chicago, with lock-stitch, shuttle running light and quiet. These machines have the following important features: Cheapness, perfect, self-adjusting and graduated tension, are under control of the operator and are always positive in their working. They are entirely self-threading in all points, including the shuttle. The needle is self-setting, the attachments are quickly and easily placed and fastened. The shuttle has an easy oscillating motion, causing it to keep its proper place against the race. Their Oxford, No. 14 and Columbian machines, with attachments, were awarded the medal premium at the World's Columbian Exposition, Chicago.

Saved by the Pony.

Elephants are extremely afraid of horses, writes Maj. John Butler in "Travels in Assam." To that fact he owed the deliverance of his wife and child from a terrible death. With them he was traversing the jungle alternately. The way had to be cut as they advanced.

I was in the lead on a large elephant in my howdah with a good battery of guns, when about midday I heard behind me a general cry of alarm, and hastily rode to the scene of danger.

It seemed that just after I had passed with the coolies who cut down the jungle, a huge Mukna elephant rushed from the jungle in a terrible rage, and pursued the little baggage elephant, which was just behind my wife and child! The little elephant screeched, and fled for its life, straight ahead.

Fortunately a pony was led beside the palkee which contained my wife and child. The wild elephant was close upon them, and they closed their eyes in horror, expecting to be dragged from their places and trampled to death. At that moment the great beast caught sight of the pony. It stopped short, turned aside, and fled back to the jungle as if pursued by an evil spirit.

The men were filled with astonishment. Most of them had fled to the protection of sheltering trees, leaving my wife and child alone.

And discovered the world all over,
The rug was the 'Lantic Ocean,
And I sailed on the nursery sofa.

I've maked b'lieve I was an Indian,
And scalped Polyphemia twice,
And I played be a big polar bear,
With the looking glass for ice.

I've maked b'lieve I was a doctor,
With pearl tapioca pills,
But I was 'bliged to give up practice,
'Cause I couldn't collect my bills.

Two times I've b'lieved be a circus,
And two times the coal man, too,
And once I was Robinson Crusoe,
And once I was Little Boy Blue.

Oh, I've maked b'lieve and I've maked b'lieve,
Till there's nothing else to be!
And now—I'm so hungry, mamma,
Let's make b'lieve I was me.

LESSON OF LOVE.

"Yann!"

"Excellency."

"Here."

With bowed head, and drawing one foot after the other slowly along the ground, as if to show great humility, the favorite huntsman of Prince Horostienko entered the arbor where his illustrious master was wont to repose after eating.

"Approach, son of a dog, and listen."

Yann Barsouck came nearer and bent forward until his face touched his master's boot.

"Are you always sure of your hand and your sight?"

"God help me, yes, excellency."

"Well, you are to wander away from the castle, as is your habit. You must pretend to have lost your way. At nightfall enter the garden secretly, and, jumping the hedge, conceal yourself in yonder clump of bushes, which is directly in front of the window of the blue salon."

"Yes, Excellency."

"The salon is sure to be lighted. There you will see the Princess and Count Alexis Karagine. Watch well. When you see me enter the room raise your gun and aim at the count."

Drawn up in his rustic chair, his face more wrinkled and distorted than ever before, the old prince spoke authoritatively. His gaze was intently fixed upon his huntsman, in whose features no other sentiment was discernable save that of servile obedience. He continued:

"Aim at the count, but do not shoot at once. Before you blow out his brains, I wish to make him understand that he is to die."

"Yes, Excellency."

"Therefore, you will stand, your finger on the trigger, until I let fall a handkerchief which I shall carry in my hand. Then, Yann, shoot, and hit your mark. You understand?"

"Yes, Excellency."

"Go."

Yann was more than a man—he was a brute. Whence he came no one knew. From Lithuania, perhaps, judging from this name, the only words he could speak when they found him, a tiny babe, under a bush in the high-road that crossed Prince Horostienko's estates. They left him to grow up in the court-yard among the servants and grooms. For his daily nourishment he depended upon the charity of the peasants and the scullions.

At sixteen he made a bow with which he could bring down all the apples and pears he wanted. Never once did he miss his aim.

One day the prince saw Yann's arrow pierce the blossom of a bergamot tree, and he commanded him to be brought before him. The servant who led Yann to his excellency trembled. But his excellency was in a good humor. He contented himself with giving the culprit fifteen lashes; after which he was sent to the head huntsman, with orders that he was to have a uniform and a gun.

Yann retained an agreeable remembrance of his master's clemency; he wished to show that he was grateful; beside, shooting was his ruling passion.

His skill surpassed that of all the most renowned marksmen of his time. At forty paces he could send a bullet directly through the eye of an otter without the slightest injury to the fur. Then he would silently deposit the dead beast at his master's feet. Being repaid with a simple "Well done." Yann would return to his thatched hut, surly and taciturn, without even a glance at the group of maidens, who, with petticoats daintily tucked up, washed their linen in the river.

He never spoke to any one. The peasants held him in awe. Evil stories were current about him. They may have been true. For Yann there was but one law—the word of his master; but one love—that for his gun.

When the evening tea had been drunk, the prince, making a pretext of having some orders to give, took leave of the count, his only guest that day, and, having kissed his wife's hand, withdrew to his own apartment.

A half-hour later he went down into the garden.

There everything spoke of love. Oppressed by the heat of the day, the plants and flowers had blossomed once into life, filling the air with their heavy fragrance. The fireflies floated like bright emeralds of the night breeze to where their mates awaited them under the thick leaves. In the grass the crickets sang softly to their love-mates of an hour.

The prince took a circuitous route, and returned on the grass, so that his footsteps might not be heard. Drawing aside the heavy leaves of an elder tree: "Are you there? Very well. Remember the signal, and fire at once! In the count's eye, Yann, like the otter's."

"Yes, excellency."

Certainly the poor princess had struggled conscientiously to resist the ardent supplications of Alexis Petrovich, But he was seventy-five and she was only twenty.

The grave caresses of her husband suggested to the princess what the infinite joys of young love might be, with its divine intoxication, its ardent embraces. Never yet had she given lips unasked, to her husband. Must she always submit to his almost paternal kisses? And what promises she read in the eyes of Alexis!

The princess did not stop to analyze either her preferences or her aversions; she loved Alexis, that was enough. Love at twenty has a spark of divinity in it; it does not even care to understand itself.

One day Alexis swore to the princess that he would only put his lips to the hem of her gown; but, carried on by the torrent of his youthful love, he kissed her passionately. She fled to her favorite, blue salon, which she never allowed any one to enter. There she permitted the count to join her.

After that they sat there whenever alone together.

So it was that, seated on a divan opposite the long window, the princess saw kneeling before her him who was not yet her lover, but to whom she felt already that she entirely belonged.

"Ah, my life, how I love you!" he was saying.

His arms were about her. Drawing her closer to him, he sought her lips. She was uneasy, and made as if she would release herself; when, suddenly conquered by the convulsion which rent her heart, she closed her eyes, and her lips met his.

Yann Barsouck watched. Before those two young creatures rapt in an ecstasy of love he smiled.

This love, what was it? A pit, into which man led woman; and she ran to it blindly, careless of her fate.

Yann understood this love. No one could imitate as he could the moaning love-lamentations of the otter to his mate. How many had he shot, to save them from their "doom," as he expressed it.

Meanwhile, his eyes fixed on the count, Yann silently leveled his carbine.

Inflamed by the long, voluptuous embrace and moved by the strength of his passion, Alexis arose. Little by little he pressed closer against him the slight form lying so unresisting in his arms. With his impatient fingers he tore aside the silk folds of her gown.

But the princess stood erect. The adorable modesty of her gesture, the look of amazement in her eyes, accompanied by so much love, so much fear, reminded Alexis of his promise. Falling once more upon his knees, respectfully, reverently, he laid his lips to the hem of her gown.

Barsouck saw all; even the look of mad passion with which the princess thanked Alexis, unconsciously promising to repay him a hundred fold for the sacrifice she now imposed on him.

A veil was suddenly torn away from the soul of the brute. His savage nature was electrified by the ray of understanding which penetrated his very heart. It was a new idea—exquisite, elevating—that of woman's modesty.

Now he understood pure love.

As Alexis rose from his knees, the prince entered. Certain of satiating his hatred, gloating over the horror into which his unexpected entrance had thrown them, the prince advanced deliberately toward the lovers, who stood trembling before him. He went cautiously, like a caterpillar creeping under the petals of a flower.

Alexis threw himself in front of the princess. But quickly disengaging herself, the woman boldly confessed all. Then, with a superb audacity, she stood staring in her husband's face.

Old Horostienko was beside himself with rage. Grasping the handkerchief which was to serve as a signal to Barsouck, he threw it, with the force of a blow, in his wife's face.

Surprised to see the count still erect, he turned toward the window—and fell, shot through the eye.

Like the otters.—Russian.

SILENT, BUT NOT BLIND.

An Old Man Who Was Wide Awake in the Interests of His Daughter.

"Be seated, sir."

As the speaker, a man slightly over two score, his hair tinged with gray, addressed these words to the young man who stood before him, his face assumed a slightly satirical expression and, brushing aside the papers that littered his desk, he said:

"Young man, it is possible that you may think me entirely ignorant of the errand which brought you to my office to-day, but allow me to say at the start that because I have been silent I have by no means been blind to your actions. Your attentions to my daughter, sir, during the past few weeks have not escaped me, and it has been the subject of much concern on my part. How you obtained an introduction to her I know not, but that it came wholly unsolicited on her part I am most certain. Suffice it to say that the mischief has been done. Now, sir, that we understand each other, what have you to say for yourself?"

While the elder man had been speaking, the face of his youthful visitor had assumed an expression of intense earnestness, which now relaxed somewhat and a light smile played over his placid features. Leaning slightly forward, he observed: "As I understand it, sir, you are slightly under 45. Habits regular, lungs sound, no heart trouble, no inherited disease, nothing," he added earnestly, looking anxiously into the face of the other, "that is likely to carry you off suddenly, is there?"

"No, sir!" thundered his companion. "What do you mean? Ah, I see," he muttered, a sudden gleam of intelligence coming into his eyes. "So you are already speculating upon the possibility of my death? You are already counting my wealth in your mind's eye, and gloating over the fortune that one day may be yours. Do you suppose, you impudent puppy, that there is the slightest possible chance of your marrying my daughter?"

As he spoke the young man had risen and drawing himself up to his full height and looking the enraged parent full in the face, he replied: "Nothing is further from my thoughts. Your daughter, sir, is a most charming and accomplished young woman, and as I have sat on the sofa beside her or occasionally heard the sweet tones of her wonderful voice as it vibrated through the innermost recesses of my soul, or as I have looked into her limpid eyes while her little hand lay in mine, I may say, sir, that I have experienced feelings and emotions which it would be unmanly in me to disavow. But much as I esteem her, the subject of love has never been discussed between us. I have taken this opportunity of gaining an introduction to you to discuss another and far more important matter."

"And what may that be?" gasped the other man.

"It is this," replied his youthful visitor, rapidly drawing a printed schedule from his side pocket, "I want to talk with you, sir, about getting your life insured."—New York World.

Also Needed a Dictionary.

I have received in my time some queer epistles, but few more funny than the enclosed, lately addressed to a firm at Liverpool by a customer. Not the least ludicrous point in this composition is the use of the phrase, "your respectful servant." If this is the language of a respectful servant, what is to be expected from a master?

"GENTLEMEN Wherefor have you not sent me the sope. His it bekawse you think my money is not so good as nobody elses. Dam you—Co wherefor have you not sent the sope. Please send sope at once and oblige your respectful servant RICHARD JONES.

AXLE GREASE AND MUSCLE.

The Combination Which Was Necessary to Pull a Man Out of a Boiler.

Henry Parker, colored, an employe of the Pictet Ice company's factory, Louisville, was recently the victim of an harrsing as well as a distressing accident, says the Courier-Journal. For two hours he was held a prisoner in a large boiler, and it was only by the liberal use of axle grease and the loss of all his clothing that he was finally rescued. Parker went into the boiler immediately after dinner Thursday to clean it out. The flues inside the boiler are arranged so that at one end there is some spring to them. The other end, where they connect with the boiler, is more solid. Parker backed unconsciously between the flues until he reached the end of the boiler. When he attempted to come back, however, he found to his surprise that his body was tightly wedged between the flues. Struggle as he would Parker could not release himself. His calls brought several men to the scene. When Parker explained his situation the first impulse of his fellow workmen was to laugh. Two men went into the boiler to release him, but their combined efforts only brought shrieks of pain from the unfortunate. Some one telephoned to Dr. Manderville Thum. A machinist was also sent for, and both arrived about the same time. All sorts of schemes were concocted by the physician, the machinist and the now thoroughly frightened workmen. To cut through the boiler would take several hours, so that had to be given up as impracticable. With the most pitiful groans Parker insisted that the flue pipes were slowly closing in on him and squeezing out his breath. Dr. Thum hit upon a plan. He sent the machinist into the boiler with a knife. By tearing and cutting the machinist succeeded in removing most of Parker's clothing. A box of axle grease was then brought into use and Parker's body was thoroughly greased where the pipes did not hold it. A rope was then tied just below his shoulders. All the men outside then caught the end of the rope, and pulled. The hips appeared to be the principal place of resistance. A shriek came from Parker as the rope began to tighten, and then his body suddenly shot forward. All of his clothes were left behind and the man was pulled out of his prison as naked as the day he was born, his whole body glistening with grease. Parker's hips and one leg were a mass of bruises, and he had to be carried to his home in a neighboring alley.

The Study of Manners.

Dr. Green, the president of Elmira college has suggested a rather novel feature in the college life—a systematic study of manners. A representative committee of all the college classes has been formed, styled the Council of Etiquette. The aim is by studying the best authorities to become well versed on all disputed points. No colloquial code of manners will do, but the standard must be the customs of cultured circles all over the world.

Every two weeks some member of the council presents some original discussion to be read at chapel to the students. The subjects are varied, the first one being "Manners in Public Places," which a young junior treated in a scholarly way. Other essays are on "Letters and Letter Writing," "Chaperones and Their Uses," "Conversation; What to Say and What to Avoid," etc.

The movement seems to be a good one, and one which will help the college girl to attain the modest and dignified bearing that she will be expected to have as a graduate.

Kickapoo Indian Sagwa, a Valuable Remedy Known to the Indians for Years and Highly Prized.

Many of our readers have probably heard of Capt. Frank D. Yates, whose exploits on the frontier have given him a national reputation.

The testimony of such a man who has lived among the red men is incontrovertible evidence of the absolute genuineness of this remedy, and its repute among that race whose noble health—whatever may have been their faults—has always been famous.

CAPT. FRANK D. YATES, GORDON, NEB.

His endorsement of it is still further proof of its effectiveness. Capt. Yates writes as follows:—

GORDON, Nebraska, July 23.

I take great pleasure in recommending The Kickapoo Remedies, and have known of them among the Indians, as I have lived on the extreme western frontier for the past 30 years and am at present a Sioux Indian interpreter for the government.

My personal experience with Sagwa—which in Indian tongue means "THE BEST"—has been considerable, but one of the most wonderful effects from personal knowledge in my own case was the curing of Chronic Catarrh with which I became afflicted, owing to the great altitude of the country in which I had been living.

It did not at first occur to me to take Kickapoo Indian Sagwa for this trouble; and it was not until I had visited the Hot Springs, and I failed to obtain relief, and the disease had become so very alarming that I was afraid it would get the best of me and develope into consumption that I concluded to take Sagwa. I got one bottle of it and a bottle of Indian Oil. The effect was so marked that I immediately ordered twelve bottles of each, and now [illegible] that the thought occurred to me, for I am entirely cured of that most disagreeable and distressing of all diseases.

I am satisfied I was cured owing to the perfect manner in which "Sagwa" purifies the blood; and I claim that Sagwa, taken in connection with Indian Oil, will positively cure the worst cases of catarrh ever known; and so far as the use of Kickapoo Indian Remedies as general family medicines are concerned, there is nothing on earth which can equal them.

the following letters had been written by your best known and most esteemed neighbors they could be no more worthy of your confidence than they now are, coming, as they do, from well known, intelligent, and trustworthy citizens, who, in their several neighborhoods, enjoy the fullest confidence and respect of all who know them. The subject of the above portrait is a well known and much respected lady, Mrs. John G. Foster, residing at No. 33 Chapin Street, Canandaigua, N. Y. She writes to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N. Y., as follows: "I was troubled with eczema, or salt-rheum, seven years. I doctored with a number of our home physicians and received no benefit whatever. I also took treatment from physicians in Rochester, New York, Philadelphia, Jersey City, Binghamton, and received no benefit from them. In fact I have paid out hundreds of dollars to the doctors without benefit. My brother came to visit us from the West and he told me to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He had taken it and it had cured him. I have taken ten bottles of the 'Discovery,' and am entirely cured, and if there should be any one wishing any information I would gladly correspond with them, if they enclose return stamped envelope."

Not less remarkable is the following from Mr. J. A. Buxton, a prominent merchant of Jackson, N. C., who says: "I had been troubled with skin disease all my life. As I grew older the disease seemed to be taking a stronger hold upon me. I tried many advertised remedies with no benefit, until I was led to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When I began taking it my health was very poor; in fact, several persons have since told me that they thought I had the consumption. I weighed only about 125 pounds. The eruption on my skin was accompanied by severe itching. It was first confined to my face, but afterwards spread over the neck and head, and the itching became simply unbearable. This was my condition when I began taking the 'Discovery.' When I would rub the parts affected a kind of branny scale would fall off.

For a while I saw no change or benefit from taking the 'Discovery,' but I persisted in its use, keeping my bowels open by taking Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and taking as much outdoor exercise as was possible, until I began to gain in flesh, and gradually the disease released its hold. I took during the year somewhere from fifteen to eighteen bottles of the 'Discovery.' It has now been four years since I first used it, and though not using scarcely any since the first year, my health continues good. My average weight being 155 to 160 pounds, instead of 125, as it was when I began the use of the 'Discovery.' Many persons have reminded me of my improved appearance. Some say I look younger than I did six years ago when I was married. I am now forty-eight years old, and stronger, and enjoy better health than I have ever done before in my life."

Yours truly,

J. A. Buxton.

Thousands bear testimony, in equally strong terms, to the efficacy of this wonderful remedy in curing the most obstinate diseases. It rouses every organ into healthy action, purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, and, through it, cleanses and renews the whole system. All blood, skin, and scalp diseases, from a common blotch, or eruption, to the worst scrofula are cured by it. For tetter, salt-rheum, eczema, erysipelas, boils, carbuncles, goitre, or thick neck, and enlarged glands and swellings, it is an unequaled remedy. Virulent, contagious, blood-poison is robbed of its terrors by the "Discovery" and by its persevering use the most tainted system renovated and built up anew.

A Book on Diseases of the Skin, with colored plates, illustrating the various eruptions, mailed by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., on receipt of six cents for postage. Or, a Book on Scrofulous Diseases, as Hip-Joint Disease, "Fever Sores," "White Swellings," "Old Sores," or Ulcers, mailed for same amount in stamps.

WORK OF CONGRESS

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, May 10.—In the senate Mr. Mills denounced the compromise tariff bill, and said that while he would not vote for any of the amendments he would vote for the bill as a whole. Mr. Lodge offered his amendment to impose double duties in the bill against Great Britain until that country should agree to an international ratio for the coinage of silver. The amendment was laid on the table—31 to 20, a strict party vote. The detailed vote is as follows:

Ayes—Allen, Bate, Berry, Blanchard, Brice, Caffery, Call, Cockrell, Coke, George, Gibson, Gorman, Gordon, Gray, Harris, Hunton, Jarvis, Jones, McLaurin, McPherson, Martin, Mills, Palmer, Pasco, Pugh, Ransom, Roach, Turpie, Vest, Walsh, White—31.

Nays—Allison, Dolph, Dubois, Gallinger, Hale, Hansbrough, Hawley, Higgins, Hoar, Lodge, McMillan, Manderson, Perkins, Platt, Proctor, Shoup, Squire, Stewart, Teller, Washburn—20.

The Democrats who did not vote were paired in favor of the motion. Senator Allen voted with the Democrats and announced that Senator Kyle was paired with Mr. Morrill (Rep., Vt.) on all questions relating to the tariff. Peffer was absent and no pair was announced for him. The vote of Allen and the announcement of the pair of Senator Kyle is taken to mean that these senators will vote with the Democrats on the tariff bill.

On motion of Mr. Washburn a bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river at Red Wing, Minn., was passed.

The house devoted the day to the naval appropriation bill.

Washington, May 11.—In the senate today Mr. Allen's resolution for an investigation of the action of the police during the Coxey parade was taken up and Senators Teller and Stewart spoke in favor of it. Mr. Hoar said Coxey knew that the law under which he was convicted was on the statute books. He came here with the deliberate intention of violating it. He wanted to test the power of the congress in the court, and when he found both court and jury against him he set up a howl. "There is danger," said Mr. Hoar, "in such assemblages. They afford cover for one or two fanatics. It does not do to scoff. Within ten years an attempt has been made to blow up the houses of parliament; within two years another attempt to blow up the French assembly. Two presidents of the United States have been murdered, one in a crowd at a depot, the other in a crowd at a theater, by misguided and fanatical persons to whom the peaceable assemblages afforded an opportunity to escape. It is needless for me," said Mr. Hoar, drawing himself up and looking about the chamber, his eye pausing when they reached Mr. Allen and Mr. Stewart, "to declare that I sympathize with all of my fellows in distress. I sympathize with them a great deal more than some of those who always prate of sympathy for the down-trodden in order to advance their disgraceful political ambitions."

The galleries burst into ringing applause at this utterance, and in order to quell the demonstration Mr. Faulkner, who was in the chair, was forced to use his gavel vigorously and threaten to clear the galleries. The resolution went over without action.

Mr. Allison offered two amendments to the drug schedule of the tariff bill, but they were defeated.

The house adopted resolutions on the death of Congressman Brattan of Maryland, which occurred this morning, and then adjourned.

Washington, May 12.—In the senate to-day the tariff bill was taken up. The pending amendment was that of Mr. Perkins to the amendment of Mr. Jones (Ark.) to change the duty on boracic acid. Mr. Jones amendment increased the duty from 20 per cent ad valorem to 2c per pound. Mr. Perkins' amendment was to increase it to the present rate, 5c. Mr. Harris moved with some temper to lay the pending amendment (that of Mr. Perkins to make the duty on boracic acid 5c per pound) on the table.

The motion was carried by a strict party vote—31 to 25. The question then recurred upon Mr. Jones' "compromise" amendment to change the duty from 20 per cent to 2c per pound.

Mr. Aldrich moved to strike out and insert 3c.

Mr. Harris moved to lay the amendment on the table. Carried by a vote of 31 to 24.

Mr. Hoar offered an amendment to the Jones amendment, providing for a specific duty of 40 per cent on boracic acid in place of 2c per pound. He wanted a record of Democratic sentiment on the two systems.

Mr. Harris remarked that he should have it, and moved to lay the amendment on the table, which was carried by a practically unanimous vote. Mr. Dolph alone voted in the negative. The vote then recurred on the Jones compromise amendment, the Republicans voting with the Democrats. Mr. Mills alone voted against the amendment. The vote on the next amendment offered by Mr. Jones, changing the duty on chromic acid from 10 per cent ad valorem to 4c per pound (an increase of 28 per cent), was taken without debate. The Republicans again voted with the Democrats and it was adopted—57 to 2—Mr. Allen and Mr. Mills voting against it.

The next amendment was that increasing the duty on citric acid from 20 to 25 per cent ad valorem. Mr. Harris moved to lay the amendment on the table. It was carried—29 to 20, as was his motion to lay on the table an amendment of Mr. Aldrich to substitute 7c per pound for 25 per cent ad valorem on citric acid. The amendment increasing the duty to 25 per cent ad valorem was then adopted.

The Republican senators by their votes to-day, and also in private conversation, indicated the purpose of voting for the amendments proposed by the Democratic compromise committee wherever they could make changes from the ad valorem to the specific system. It is understood that this question of policy was under discussion by the Republican advisory committee to-day, and that while a majority of those present counseled this course, the decision was not unanimous. It is one of the questions which will be discussed at the Republican caucus Monday night.

After action on some minor bills the house went into committee of the whole to consider general appropriation bills (Mr. Richardson of Tennessee in the chair), and the naval appropriation bill was taken up. Mr. Boutelle advocated liberality towards the navy to continue the good work commenced under Secretary Chandler.

Washington, May 14.—The senate took up the tariff bill again to-day, but made little progress. There was an evident desire on the part of the Democrats to wait until after the Republican caucus to-night before taking any decisive action. The Democrats are hopeful that the caucus will decide upon treating the tariff in what they consider "a business like" manner and letting the bill proceed upon its course without as much speech-making and without the effort at delay which the Democrats claim has been displayed by some of the Republican senators so far in the debate. There is unquestionably a large element on the Republican side of the senate chamber opposed to any course which smacks in the least of filibustering. This element includes a large number of senators from the West, and also a sprinkling of the older Eastern senators, who feel that they have a record to sustain against dilatory tactics. The younger New England Republican senators are, however, almost a unit in favor of continuing the fight upon the lines which have been pursued up to this date.

The house considered District of Columbia matters to-day.

WILKIN HAS GONE.

The Eminent and Aged Jurist Passes Away.

St. Paul, May 14.—Another old settlers' name must be stricken from the rolls. Full of years and honors Hon. Westcott Wilkin, who for so many years graced the bench of this state, passed quietly away Saturday night at about 10 o'clock in his room at the Windsor hotel, where he has lain for several months awaiting the summons of the grim visitor. With him at the time of his death were his old friend, Col. C. J. Moafort, and his sister, Mrs. R. C. Coleman of Goshen, N. Y., his native town. Her son, Wilkin Coleman of Atchison, Kan., was also present in the city, but was not at the bedside, as the demise, thought for some days expected, was, in a sense, sudden. Judge Wilkin was born Jan. 4, 1823, at Goshen, N. Y., and came to Minnesota Territory in 1856. For twenty-seven years he served as district judge of Ramsey county and at last positively declined a renomination.

BARN AND STOCK GONE.

N. E. Johnson and Family Come Near Losing Their Lives.

Sioux Falls, S. D., May 14.—The barn of N. E. Peterson, who lives fourteen miles northeast of here, in Lyon township, was struck by lightning during the storm Tuesday night. The barn caught fire and was totally destroyed, together with thirteen head of cattle, three head of horses, machinery, grain, etc. The total loss is $2,000; no insurance. Mr. Peterson and his entire family narrowly escaped death. He was at the barn doing the chores when the storm struck, and his wife and two children becoming frightened, went to the barn. All were rendered unconscious by the bolt. When Peterson recovered consciousness the barn was ablaze. The wife and children were unconscious.

Youthful Suicide.

Findlay, Ohio, May 14.—Paul Ewing, aged fifteen, son of Dr. M. J. Ewing of this city, suicided to-day by taking forty grains of morphine. He was in love with a young girl who would not reciprocate his affections, and ended his troubles. Before losing consciousness he informed his parents that two other boys had agreed with him to do the same act. The others failed to do so, however, and say they were only joking, but they are now prostrated at the result.

Used Him Roughly.

Minneapolis, May 14.—About 8 o'clock last night William Grosbeck, living at Camden Place, was held up by three men at Washington and Twenty-sixth avenue north. He was subjected to considerable violence and received a serious blow on the head from a slung shot. The blow rendered him unconscious and he was robbed of $32 in money and a valuable watch. It was some time before he recovered consciousness, and when he came to he found himself lying in a lumber yard.

Funds to Defend Rioters.

Pittsburg, May 14. — The Slavonic, Polish and Bohemian people of the United States will see that an effort is made to secure justice for the men of their nationality who are now involved in trouble in the Connellsville coke region. Money is to be raised all over the United States to assist in the defense of the men now charged with rioting and to secure justice for those who have been abused without cause.

Firemen Burned.

Sioux City, Iowa, May 14.—Early this morning while the firemen were asleep the West Seventh street fire house was destroyed by fire. Firemen Provost and Hilgers were severely burned, the former fatally. The horses in the building and all apparatus were burned. The fire is thought to have been of incendiary origin.

Died at Great Falls.

Great Falls, Mont., May 14.—Frank B. Tuttle, member of the firm of Tuttle & Turner, attorneys of this city, died today of pneumonia. He came here from Milwaukee a year and a half ago. He was a member of the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Royal Arcanum. He leaves a wife and three children.

Work on the New Bridge.

Red Wing, Minn., May 14. — D. D. Smith of Minneapolis, who has secured the contract for the substructure of the bridge across the Mississippi river, says he will begin work in two weeks. He will employ only Red Wing labor and use Red Wing stone.

White House Deserted.

Washington, May 14. — The White House is at present without any of its distinguished occupants. Following the departure of the president Mrs. Cleveland left last evening with her two young daughters for Buffalo, N. Y., where she will make a brief visit with her mother, Mrs. Folsom.

Sympathy for Coxey's Case.

Washington, May 14.—Representative Boen to-day received a memorial signed by 100 citizens of Graceville, Minn., indorsing the Coxey bills and expressing their sympathy with the Coxey movement.

TABERNACLE BURNED

DR. TALMAGE'S CHURCH IS DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Fire Starts Soon After the Congregation Is Dismissed and the Building Is Soon in Ruins—Third Time the Building Is Burned.

Brooklyn, N. Y., May 14.—While Dr. Talmage was shaking hands with his congregation yesterday, and about 200 people were left in the building, some one remarked: "I smell smoke." Almost instantly a tongue of fire was seen to leap out from between the pipes of the organ. Dr. Talmage commanded the people to leave the church, and they lost no time in obeying the command. Two of the trustees who were in their room in the tower were overcome by smoke and had to be carried out. Within ten minutes after the first alarm had been given the church was doomed, and the flames had extended to Hotel Regent, which was soon beyond control of the firemen. The Tabernacle and Hotel Regent were totally destroyed, and the Summerfield Methodist Episcopal church, together with about twenty residences, were more or less damaged. The total loss is over $1,000,000. This is the third time the Tabernacle has been destroyed by fire.

Russell Sage, who has a mortgage of $125,000 on the church property, and is also the owner of the site on which it stood, is fully insured. Mr. Sage said: "It is probable that the people of Brooklyn will come forward with a big subscription. The insurance will cover the rest. If they want to rebuild I will put no obstacle in their way. In other words, I will let the debt and interest stand over for an indefinite period, let them rebuild with the insurance money and what they can raise in subscriptions and in other ways. I have nothing but the deepest sympathy for the church and its people, and above all I am imbued with the deepest affection and admiration for Dr. Talmage, who has been my close personal friend for many years. On his account I will do all I can to help them."

CAMPING ON HIS TRAIL.

A Posse Still Pursuing the Minnesota Rape Fiend.

Fergus Falls, Minn., May 14.—The excitement over the pursuit of the villain who assaulted Mrs. Ward at Hewitt is still unabated, and it is believed that he will be captured within a day or two.

It is now pretty well established that his name is Peter Battelson, and he formerly lived in Awedale, this county. About two years ago Battelson assaulted a woman successfully near Underwood, for which he was arrested. The hearing was postponed and Battelson was allowed by the justice to go home. With a long term in prison certain, he naturally disappeared. He has been seen up on the reservation several times, but it was not known there that he was wanted. After assaulting Mrs. Ward at Hewitt he came on through Otter Tail county. At one place he attempted to assault a school teacher, but she ran around the school house and finally escaped to her boarding house. He was last seen in Amor, where he attempted to assault another woman.

At least fifty men are now in pursuit of him, and the county is fully aroused. The women are afraid to remain at home alone, and in fact are in a state of terror. Sheriff Billings, who returned from the town of Amor, where the criminal was last seen, thinks that he is either striking for Pelican Rapids and Barnesville, on the Great Northern, or Detroit and Lake Park on the Northern Pacific. Battelson is a Norwegian, about thirty-five, with a red mustache curled at the ends, and weighs about 155. He carries a Winchester and a revolver, also a small black satchel. Mr. Ward, whose wife he assaulted, is in the pursuing party, and will make short work of him if he finds him. A reward of $200 is offered for him.

CHILDREN SUICIDE.

They Thought They Were a Burden to a Widowed Mother.

Vienna, May 14.—A sad affair occurred here to-day. A poor widow named Jerabek had two children, a girl and boy, aged eleven and nine, respectively. The woman was compelled to work hard to support herself and her children who were too young to give her any assistance. The children determined to kill themselves and thus relieve her from the burden of their support. To-day they went to one of the bridges spanning the Danube and mounted the parapet. Then they hastily embraced and kissed each other and, clasping hands, jumped into the river. Before assistance could reach them their bodies were swept out of sight. When the mother returned from work she found the lodgings deserted. She began to look for the children, thinking they had gone into the streets to play. Not finding them she returned to her home, when she found a note that she had overlooked, in which the children said that as they were only a burden to her they had decided to commit suicide. The widow is frantic because of the loss of her children, and it is feared that she will become incurably insane.

THE DAM BROKE.

A Flood Sweeps Down a River in Montana.

Lima, Mont., May 14.—The Lima dam broke this morning and its body of water is surging down Red rock river at a terrific rate, sweeping everything before it. As soon as this was discovered men on horseback hastened down the river toward the ranches, but almost every rancher along the bottoms has lost everything. Houses, barns, fences, hay stacks and all kinds of stock are being carried away. The railroad company sent a special train to warn the people between Lima and Dillon, and have sent out a large force of men to the scene of the flood. The track is washed out between here and Dillon in many places and the damage will figure high. The water, after leaving the dam, has a clean sweep through a well settled country for over sixty miles, and many families will be without shelter or food.

Whisky Unbalanced Her Mind.

Glenwood, Minn., May 14.—An old woman whose mind seemed unbalanced, was taken into custody by Marshal Wilson at the Northern Pacific depot. This morning she was taken before the probate judge. She gave her name as Eliza Watson, from the Big Bend country, Washington. The cause of her apparent mental distress was due to a dose of whisky on an empty stomach. Being without money, she was given $2 from the county treasury and allowed to resume her journey. It is thought she is a Coxeyite of the female persuasion.

FIRE AND STAMPEDE.

Many People Injured During a Fire at Bradford, Pa.

Bradford, Pa., May 14.—The barrel house at Emery's refinery in this city took fire yesterday afternoon, presumably by spontaneous combustion, and was destroyed. The loading racks and five oil tank cars standing on the side track of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg road were also burned. The fire was a fierce one and attracted immense crowds of people from all over this locality. While the firemen were making a final stand and thousands of people were watching them there was a tremendous explosion. A tank car holding 4,300 gallons of benzine had let go with a mighty roar. Fortunately the burning benzine which was flung into the air in sheets of liquid fire had consumed itself before settling down over the crowd. The explosion was followed by a panic that cannot be described in words. Blind, unreasoning, pitiless instinct of self-preservation showed itself, and the weak went down before the strong, in multitudes of cases in the frantic rush to escape what seemed to threaten a horrible death. In the stampede men, as well as women and children, were thrown down and trodden over by the flying masses that surged up from behind. Thirty-five of the firemen were burned so that the skin peeled off their faces and hands and the hair was singed off their heads and faces. Of the many others who were slightly burned there is no record, and the total number of those burned and injured in the stampede will probably reach a hundred persons. With all the suffering this fire will cause the property loss will not exceed $5,000.

THE TOWN INDICTED.

Why the People of Dawson, N. D., Badly Used.

Dawson, N. D., May 14.—Dawson is one of the main coaling stations on the Dakota division of the Northern Pacific road. As the result of a recent visit of a member of a firm here to the St. Paul offices of the company, a detective of the company was sent here to look up parties who are said to have been helping themselves to coal from the company's docks. After remaining in town nearly a week the detective laid the information he had gleaned before State's Attorney Walker at Steele, with the result that warrants were sworn out for the arrest of forty-two of the principal farmers and business men of this community, not one of which has yet been served. It turns out that the whole scheme was one of blackmail, as not one of the friends or customers of the aforesaid firm are included in the number against whom complaints were made. It is said the only evidence the company has secured is the statements of this firm, and the authorities have been convinced that it would be useless to go to trial on their statements.

Tapped and Fired.

Athens, Pa., May 14.—The main line of the United States Pipe company, running through the forest nine miles from this place, has been tapped, and the oil, spurting from the hole in a regular fountain, has been fired. The line has been cut in a valley, and owing to the force of gravitation, the oil in several miles of four-inch pipe is crowding down to gush out of the break. The man who broke into the pipe line also cut the telegraph line. A large force of men has been ordered to the scene to fight the fire which is now spouting to the tree tops in a fountain of flame. The United States Pipe line is an anti-Standard concern. The work is supposed to be in payment of some real or imaginary grievance.

Troops Wanted.

Washington, May 14. — Acting Secretary Sims, of the interior department, today sent to the secretary of war a request that a company of troops be ordered to Anderson, Ind. T., to assist Indian Agent Wisdom, of the Union agency, to preserve the peace. The action was taken in accordance with a telegram received in the bureau of Indian affairs this morning from Agent Wisdom, which represents that at Anderson there are 2,000 miners who have struck, and they are exceedingly boisterous and threatening. The agency police force, supported by a squad of marshals, is inadequate to meet the crisis.

Colored Democrats.

Washington, May 14.—The annual convention of the National Negro Democratic league will be held in Indianapolis, commencing July 3. State conventions will be held in various states on the first Tuesday in June to select two delegates and two alternates to represent each state at the national convention. The call for the convention will be issued in a few days.

A Factory Closed.

Peoria, Ill., May 14.—The American Glucose company to-day closed its factory in this city, throwing 850 men out of employment. Inability to secure a sufficient supply of coal is given as the cause.

A Delightful Affair.

Sioux Falls, S. D., May 14.—It has just leaked out that Ernest Wilkes, a prominent lawyer and prohibition leader here, indulged in a prize fight with a boy named Hardy, last Saturday night, between 9 and 10 o'clock. The trouble arose over a game of billiards and the young men decided to appeal to the arbitrament of the fist. They adjourned to the Lincoln school grounds, and in the presence of a crowd of boys, fought it out. Wilkes, who is the smaller of the two, is reported to have fainted three times, and was revived by the turning on of the hose.

TO MEET IN ST. PAUL

TIME AND PLACE FOR THE MINNESOTA REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

The State Central Committee Chooses St. Paul and the Date Will Be July 11—The Convention Will Be Composed of 1,003 Delegates.

St. Paul, May 11.—The Minnesota state Republican central committee met to-day and decided to hold the convention in St. Paul Wednesday, July 11. O. W. Hutchinson of Hutchinson was elected a place on the state central committee in place of Maj. H. R. Strait of Scott county, deceased. The scheme to have the convention composed of 1,003 delegates was unanimously adopted. The basis of one delegate for every 200 votes cast for Harrison in 1892 with delegates at large from each county as follows: Five delegates from counties that cast 900 votes or more for Harrison, and three delegates for counties that cast fewer than 400 votes. On such a basis the convention will be made up, by counties, in this way:

A Home Patronage Convention Will Be Held in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, May 11.—A call has just been issued for what is probably the most important convention, viewed from the commercial standpoint, ever held in the Northwest. The convention is called to meet in Minneapolis on the 23d of this month. That call is signed by W. S. Benton, president Minnesota Linseed Oil company, Minneapolis; C. B. Heffelfinger, president North Star Boot and Shoe company, Minneapolis; J. A. Gregg, manager Nichols & Dean, heavy hardware, St. Paul; Eli S. Warner, manager Twin City Varnish company, St. Paul; J. D. Green, vice president and general manager of Winona Wagon company, Winona; J. A. Willard of Mankato, president of several manufacturing concerns; George Tileston, president George Tileston Milling company, St. Cloud; H. C. Goddard, secretary Decorah Wind Mill company, Decorah, Iowa; A. L. Babcock, Billings, Mont.

The call, to which the above names of representative business men are attached, sets forth the fact that "it has long been a matter of serious consideration with the manufacturers of the Northwest whether the goods manufactured in this section have received the attention and patronage merited or not, and that it is important to take some steps to gain the attention of the retailers, and particularly the consumers, to the fact that in building up our cities and towns and to give prosperity to all the people, it is necessary to build up, increase and support the manufacturing and jobbing interests of the Northwest, and to inspire in the consumer a loyalty to home retailers and induce consumers to purchase at home rather than to go abroad for supplies." The call proceeds to say that the signers have seen fit to invite the co-operation and assistance of the Northwest generally in organizing a home trade organization, whose province it shall be to call the attention of the people to the manufactured products of the Northwest and seek to induce them, price and quality being equal, to purchase from Northwestern merchants goods made by Northwestern workingmen, who spend their wages in the Northwest.

Ed Whaley went down to Crookston on Monday with six small wolves which he had dug out of a hole. The state pays five dollars apiece for them so Ed had a lucky find.

All the wheat that will be seeded is now in the ground and the early sown is up and doing finely. On the ridges it has a good start and the high winds have done but little damage. There is some oats and barley yet to be sown. The grain has all gone in in good shape and the prospects for a big crop were never better at this season of the year.

J. E. Gilmore, W. B. Marston, Hugh McKea, W. C. Cline and M. B. Arstrong Northern Pacific land examiners, were in town yesterday. Mr. Gilmore the engineer in charge of the party informed us that they were sent out by the Northern Pacific to make a report of the country from Red Lake Falls to Lake of the Woods. It is evident from this that the N. P. people are thinking are thinking of a line that will tap the new gold fields at Rainy Lake. It is to be hoped that if they build a line it will come up this way.

Says a daily paper: Advices from Australia show an alarming increas in casualities, crimes and acute distress. The police are unable to cope with desperate housebreakers, who swarm in the large cities. A few that have been arrested gave as an excuse that famine drove them to deeds of violence. The latest files of Australian papers are filled with accounts of burglaries and labor troubles. In all the colonies the men are organized into a standing army and have been making sorties. In New South Wales, South Australia and Victoria, last month, 337 burglars were captured, and twenty-three were shot by house-holders.

The unemployed in South Australia and Victoria are becoming desperate and applications by deputations of thousands to Premier Patterson are made for relief.

The government's claim is that the unemployed problem is too complicated to solve. In Sydney $500 each week is spent in aiding 500 families. Five thousand men in South Australia have asked the governor to call a special session of parliment to discuss means to aid them. The governor refused. Thousands are sleeping in the open air and several have starved to death.

Suicides are frequent, ninety-eight persons killed themselves in one week, some of them heretofore well-to-do people.

On one day last week at Sydney, besides a score of petty robberies, the city hospital was robbed of all its valuables.

And yet the authors of all this misery and suffering, the men who have demonetized one half of the metal money of the world, the destroyers of silver, look on with complacency and tell us that it is fear of change in the tariff (?) that has caused it all. Can our tariff tinkering cause such misery and poverty in one of the provinces of free trade England?

What human ass can believe such nonsense? We believe it to be God's truth that the destruction of silver money by the bondholders' and bankers' conspiracy is the great cause of this financial trouble and suffering.—Waseca Herald.

The strange manipulations which have taken place behind the curtains of the senate committee are illustrated not only in the sugar and whiskey schedules, but in queer dealings throughout the length of the bill. It is only too apparent that interest after interest had a "pull and got what it wanted. For example, the borax ring got its protection increased from 20 per cent in the house bill to 40 per cent in the final bill, while the whiting interest got an increase from 25 per cent to 93 per cent, and the tannic acid folks from 35 per cent to 180 per cent. Mr. Carnegie was rewarded for his argument in behalf of the Wilson bill by having his protection on beams increased from 30 per cent to 50 per cent, on boiler plate from 25 per cent to 45 per cent, and on steel ingots from 25 per cent to 37 per cent. The New York manufacturers of sweater made clothing are protected by duties of 45 per cent to 50 per cent.

It takes the New York World to "size up" the protection article of its party. Under the significant editorial caption "Ask For It" the World with withering sarcasm says:

Having satisfied the sugar trust, the lead trust and the monopolists in four hundred other departments of production, the senate "compromisers" on the tariff bill have now equitably permitted the Standard Oil company to grab what it wanted.

If there are any other of the trusts and monopolies that have not yet got all they want in the tariff bill it is desirable that they shall come forward with their demands at once so that whatever they want may be granted and the work of passing the bill go forward. There is a tenderness for trusts in the senate chamber which will not permit the denial of any demands from that quarter porticularly while the stock market offers to senators the opportunities incident to early "inside" information.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Cut this out and paste it in your hat for future referance.

"Within one year from the first day of July 1894, the American congress will pass and the president will willingly sign an act for the free and unlimited coinage of silver; and it will be done at the special instance and urgent request of the manipulators of finance in Wall Street!

The farce is almost ended! The bankers and brokers are playing a strong game to gain control of a great portion of the silver of the United States (they have now nearly all of the silver bullion of Europe and Asia) and when a few more millions of ounces of the white metal have been gathered into their strong boxes at the present low price, they will have a revelation from some higher source, and every one of the disreputable gang, even Voorhees and John Sherman, as well as our own geant financiers Washburn and Davis will be converted to bi-metalism. Silver bullion will at once return to 129¼ cents and these "poor fellows" who put up the scheme to wreck the country for their own profit will be able to realise on "a perfectly legitimate transaction."

Of course the profits will be less than they anticipated—less than they might have been if the miserable populists haud't howled so soon, but with a profit of two hundred and fifty millions now, realized out of the scheme, they will be in better condition to plot and carry out some greater fraud a few years hence. But free and unlimited coinage of silver at 15¼ or 16 to one is almost at hand. The poor of the country have earned it all by their toil and sweat, that the banker and broker might realize. What a wonderful country we have, what wonderful people are ours!—So rich, so shrewd, so progressive! ! !

The peoples party county central committee met Monday at the auditors office and agreed upon a call for a county convention some time in June the date to be fixed by the Chairman. The convention will be held either on Tuesday or Thursday. A dispute arose in the committee as to whether it should be held to accommodate the St. Hilaire country or Thirteen Towns in the matter of the train. Mr. Wickstrom of Bray claimed the former conventions were held to suit the Thirteen Towns and that his section wanted to be accommodated this time. The matter was settled by Messrs. Sampson and Wickstrom casting lots for choice of dates and Mr. Wickstrom won. The basis of representation will be one for each voting precinct and one for each fifty votes or major fraction thereof cast for Ignatius Donnelly for governor in 1892. The village of Thief River Falls, Fertile McIntosh and Fosston and the newly organized towns will vote in the caucus with the towns from which they were detached. New town committees will be elected at the caucuses. The convention will be the only one held to nominate county officers and elect delegates to the state, congressional and legislative conventions. The official call will be published next week. The conventions will likely be held either on the 21st or 28th of June.—Crookston Tribune.

In fixing the date for the Republican state convention there was the same old twaddle about making a date when the farmers were not busy so that they could attend. How these fellows do love the farmer! They are continually on the strain to do something for him. They sit up nights to devise something for his good. They put tariff on eggs for his benefit and send Kiefers to congress to protect his potatoes. They give him a state elevator with a side wink to each other and the tip that the courts will knock it out. They considerately kill a bill to tax the farmers adjoining land which railways own and hold to reap the value the settlement of farmers gives them, while avoiding the burdens of schools and roads and local government. In a thousand ways they give the farmer practical evidence of their fondness for him and now again they fix the date of their convention about the time that the end of haying runs into the early harvest so that he can leave his work and come down and ratify the slate that the boys have fixed up. And there are farmers left yet—missed by the fool killer in his last round-up—who are simple enough to take stock in the sincerity of this old, seamy platitude.—Daily Globe.

The sum of $1,100 was raised for the purpose of bringing to this city the Red River Dalen. Citizens of East Grand Forks contributed one-third of the amount, McIntosh one-third and Red Lake Falls the balance. The presumption is that the Dalen being printed and published in the Norwegian language, will easily influence the Scandinavian vote, which in this section of country predominates. It is now understood that the divisionists will also publish a French paper in the French settlements thus being in a position to attack the enemy in all quarters and upon all sides, and in all languages.—East Grand Forks Courier.

Ed Gates returned last evening from a two months course of the Rainy Lake country. He has been all over the gold fields both on the main land and on the islands and has located what he believes to be a very rich claim. Mr. Gates brought back with him several samples of ore all very rich in free gold and he says there is no doubt but there is some rich mines yet yet to be developed up there. The excitement he says has greatly died out and there are not more than half as many people up there now as there was last winter. Rainy Lake City has about 1000 inhabitants and for a frontier mining town is a comparitively quiet place. Mr. Gates intends to commence at once developing his mine and will return there the first of the week to commence operations.—Crookston Times.

W. A. Sorsoleil, Agent

I have derived a great benefit from Beggs. Blood Purifier and Blood Maker and will take great pleasure in recommending it to all I meet.—Chas Hill, Aberdeen, O.—for sale by J. L. Johnson Druggest.

I have been troubled for several years with scrofula, caused by impure blood, but could get no relief until lately. Our druggist recommended Beggs' Blood Purifier and Blood maker so highly that I decided to try it and have up to the present time, used five bottles and find it to be all that it is recommended.—Orrin Stone, Otsego Wis.—For sale by J. L. Johnson, Druggist.

I have recommended Beggs' Blood Purifier and Cherry Cough Syrup several times and must say that I have been surprised and more than pleased at results following use of same. I am not in habit of endorsing patent medicines, but can say truthfully, Beggs' medicines are all that is claimed for them.—Tesah Jones, M. D., Wintersville, Mo.—For sale by J. L. Johnson Druggest.

My wife had the worst case of Dandruff I ever saw and had tried three or four other remedies, and two bottles of Beggs' Hair Renewer proved all claimed for it.—E. P. Dunagan, Gainsville, Ga.—For sale by J. L. Johnson, Druggist.

I am getting better since I began the use of Beggs. Blood Purifier and Blood Maker.—B. H. Williams, Chenango, Texas.—for sale by J. L. Johnson Druggest.

HIS WEDDING OUTFIT.

By Levying on Enough Customers He Got a Good One.

Cæsar was a very black waiter employed at a little restaurant near Thirty-fifth street. The customers of this restaurant were the salaried young men who lived in the neighborhood. They straggled in for breakfast between the hours of 7 and 10. Many thoughtful attentions on the part of Cæsar, and a slight recognition of these in the way of dimes and quarters, had resulted in a certain familiarity between Cæsar and the customers.

One morning when the board of trade young man was eating his toast and poached eggs Cæsar stood against the wall a few feet away and gently sung:

"Ha'd trials, tribulations,
O my Lo'd."

"Happy this morning, Cæsar?" asked the board of trade young man.

"No, sah; Ah'm not happy. I sing when I feel bad. Ah've had trouble."

"Trouble?"

"Lose me close."

"Lost your clothes?"

"Cullud man took 'em. He gi' me the hot run, suah."

"That's too bad."

"Yes, sah. Wus' of it is I'm 'bout to be ma'ed, an I got no money to buy more."

"I'll tell you what I'll do, Cæsar. I've got some clothes over at my room. They're pretty good. I'll make up a bundle tomorrow morning."

"Say, yo' goin to save my life."

Ten minutes later the young man who works in a wholesale house heard the same plaintive story, which was introduced by Cæsar, who had insisted upon saying, "Ha'd trials, tribulations," until the young man asked what was the matter.

A week later Cæsar was married, and they didn't see him for three days. A strange young man, a substitute, waited on the table. One morning there were four of them chanced to meet at breakfast, and the conversation turned on Cæsar's marriage. The board of trade young man said he felt a particular interest in it because he had furnished the wedding outfit for the groom.

"I guess not," said the wholesale young man. "I did that."

"That's queer—so did I," said the third.

"And I," added the fourth.

They compared notes and found that each had contributed garments to the groom's wardrobe, the total giving him a richness and variety of makeup which must have been a revelation to the bride's family. The substitute waiter was called as a witness. He had attended the wedding, and he said that Cæsar had "knocked 'em cold" with a dress coat, a white satin vest, trousers with silk braid down the side, a light overcoat and a silk hat.

Cæsar is back at his old job now, wearing a different suit every day, but when he brings in an order of liver and bacon and sings about hard trials and tribulations the young men pay no attention to him. As nearly as they could gather, the story about the "cullud man" stealing Cæsar's original wardrobe was entirely fictitious.—Chicago Record.

Superfluous.

Another of the many good stories told at the expense of the "cipher telegram" of the modern business world came up the other day.

A city broker whose home is in New Jersey was obliged by illness to lose a day from his business, so he sent word to his clerk at the office to let him know by telegram something of the day's transactions.

The hours wore on, but no telegrams appeared, and the broker began to be mystified, not to say provoked, at the unaccountable negligence of his faithful clerk. The telegraph office was a mile from his home, and there was nothing to be done but to wait for the messenger who didn't come.

Next morning the unhappy suburbanite stopped on his way to the station to make inquiries at the telegraph office for his missing telegram. The operator was an old town gossip, with an interest in everybody's affairs, and greeted his visitor in neighborly fashion.

"Good morning, sir. All well, I hope?"

"Yes, all right. I say, didn't you get a telegram for me yesterday?"

"Telegram for you? Well, let me see. Why, yes; I believe I did. But I couldn't make anything out of it, so I didn't think 'twas worth while to send it up."—New York Tribune.

His Explanation.

Again.

A terrifying shout rang through the corridors and awoke the midnight echoes.

"Fire, fire!"

The lady in No. 419 started from her sleep and listened.

"Fire, fire!"

"Oh, dear!" she petulantly exclaimed as she rose from her couch. "Another dress occasion, I suppose."

Happily she remembered just where she had placed her hairpins.

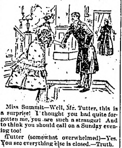
Nothing Left.



Miss Summit—Well, Mr. Tutter, this is a surprise! I thought you had quite forgotten me, you are such a stranger! And to think you should call on a Sunday evening too!

Tutter (somewhat overwhelmed)—Yes. You see everything else is closed.—Truth.

A Delayed Message.

The average New York man has his own views regarding the suburban native. A lawyer and his wife who live in New York decided to spend a Sunday evening with their sister in Westchester county. They had promised to go out on a certain train, when a sleigh was to be waiting for them at the station. On the day when they were to start the New Yorkers, seeing that they could not go by that train, tried to telephone to the Westchester county house. Something was wrong, however, with the Westchester telephone, and so the lawyer called up the station agent, who keeps a stable, is postmaster, road commissioner and everything else.

"Will you send word to Mr. S.," he asked, "not to send to the 2:40 train, but to have the sleigh at the station for the 4 o'clock train?"

The stable keeper, etc., promised that he would, and that ended the conversation.

When the lawyer and his wife stepped off the train, they found a brother-in-law waiting for them who looked as if he had a grievance.

"Why in the world didn't you send me word that you were going to wait over a train?" he asked. "I have been freezing around here for an hour and a half."

"Why, didn't J., the agent, tell you?"

"Not a word from J."

So they took the complacent agent, etc., to task, and this is the way he explained it:

"You see, at first I was going to send over, and then I thought to myself your coachman would come over for the 2:40 train, and I could tell him. Then he could go back and tell you."

"Well, but you did not say a word to me when you saw that I, and not the coachman, had come."

"Well, what was the use? As long as you were here there was no use sending you back to your house to tell your own self something, was there? So I didn't bother you."—New York Tribune.

Evidently a Foreigner.

"How will you have your hair cut, sah?" said the talkative barber to the man in the chair.

"Minus conversational prolixity," replied the patient.

"How's dat, sah?"

"With abbreviated or totally eliminated narrations."

"Guess I don't catch on yit, boss."

"With quiescent mandibulars."

"Which?"

"Without effervescent verbosity."

"Sah!"

"Let diminutive colloquy be conspicuous by its absence."

The barber scratched his head thoughtfully a second and then went over to the proprietor of the shop with the whispered remark:

"I dunno whether that man in my chair is crazy or a foreigner, but I kyant find out what he wants, so I kyant."

The proprietor went to the waiting customer and said politely:

"My man doesn't seem to understand you, sir. How would you like your hair cut?"

"In silence."

The proprietor gave a withering look at his journeyman, while the latter began work and felt so utterly crushed that he never asked the patient if he'd buy a bottle of hair restorer.—Truth.

No!

The day that she said "No" to me I never shall forget
As now my mind reviews it with no traces of regret.
My arm was twined around her waist, her lips were near to mine,
And when she murmured "No" to me I felt so wondrous fine!
Though time shall dim my eyesight and shall turn my pate to snow,
I never shall forget the day she softly murmured "No."

It may seem strange, and yet it is with fervor I confess
I would not have that simple "No" once turned into a "Yes."
I looked into her earnest eyes, and in love's tender tone
I asked her if from that time forth she'd like to dwell alone,
Content to live an old maid's life without my love, and so
You understand my feelings when she softly murmured "No!"

HE DUG THEM UP.

The Sad Case of an Amateur Gardener Who Didn't Know Beans.

Besides gaining considerable knowledge of an agricultural kind from his last summer's experience as an amateur gardener, Robinson has learned what a blessed thing it is to be mild and considerate in criticising another in a matter in which you are not expert yourself. Robinson had said one day that he was going to plant cabbages, and before he got home that evening his wife, as a pleasant surprise for him, bought 25 cabbage plants, set them all out in the garden and then lay back and chuckled to think how surprised dear old Robinson would be when he saw them. He was surprised.

Mrs. Robinson had set out the 25 cabbage plants all in a bunch, just as she had received them from the seedsman. Then Robinson sat down on the lawn and laughed, and asked Mrs. Robinson if she had ever seen a full grown cabbage, and how she supposed 25 of them could grow in a space three inches square.

Mrs. Robinson retorted with woman's argument in similar cases. She burst into tears and told Robinson he was a mean old thing, and if he knew so much he could just set them out again himself, so there!

Robinson took a spade and a dibble and set them out. While doing this he noticed that he turned up an extraordinary number of small, dirty white pulpy things, with green sprouts sticking out at one end. They looked unfamiliar, but he dug on without thinking much about them, and when the 25 cabbages were set out, each with a fair distance between it and its neighbor, so that it might without inconvenience grow four feet in diameter if so it was minded, he condescendingly called his wife to come that he might show her how so simple a thing should be done.

The first things that caught Mrs. Robinson's eye were the peculiarly dirty white pulpy things, and poking at one with her toe she said:

"What did you dig those up for?"

"Oh, those," replied the sapient Robinson. "Those, my dear, so far as I can make out, are a variety of inedible fungus, although I never saw any just like them before."

"Inedible fungus!" cried Mrs. Robinson with much feeling. "The idea! Those are the beans Johnnie Davis planted for me last Friday, and they're just beginning to sprout, and here you've dug them all up. Well, I may not know much about cabbages, but I do know beans!"—New York World.

Extortion Rebuked.

A lanky individual in a long and faded brown overcoat dropped into a restaurant on Dearborn street yesterday morning, took his seat at one of the tables, placed his hat on the floor by the side of his chair and beckoned to one of the waiters.

"Have you got any stewed pumpkin?" he asked.

"I think not," replied the waiter.

"Got any fried onions?"

"No."

"Biled turnips?"

"No."

"What have you got that a man can eat anyhow?"

"Here's our bill of fare."

"I can't read it without my specs, and I didn't bring 'em. S'posin you was hungry yourself, what'd you want?"

"Well, here's porterhouse steak, roast turkey, with cranberry sauce; veal cutlets, breaded; saddle of venison, minced clams on toast, pork and beans"——

"Pork an beans? That'll do. Bring me some pork an beans an a cup of sassafras tea purty strong."

"We haven't any sassafras tea."

"Hain't got no sassafras tea? What kind of an eatin house are you runnin? Don't you know everybody ort to drink sassafras tea when the spring's comin on? Kind o' thins the blood like. How much do you charge for pork an beans?"

"Twenty-five cents."

The stranger stooped and picked up his hat, put it on his head, rose deliberately and said to the waiter in a tone of withering rebuke:

"Young man, when I want to git robbed on pork an beans I'll go to a first class tavern an have it done in style. Any charge fur the time I've been settin down here? No? Well, good day."—Chicago Tribune.

Approved His Course.

"I don't never read them lyin newspapers," said Farmer Bailday to the gentleman in the next seat.

"That's right," replied his fellow passenger; "you can't believe a word they say."

And on the strength of the slight acquaintance thus formed the polished stranger sold the self sufficient countryman two brass bricks for $1,500 each.—Detroit Tribune.

Sewer Air Poisoning.

Recent investigations of the air of the London sewers have revealed the fact that there is a poisonous amanation from sewers which may be as injurious to health as the bacteria to which it has been customary to ascribe all ill effects. The most noticeable productions of sewer gas poisoning are nephritis and albuminuria. Cold and chill are usually held responsible for these affections, but it would appear that they may be caused entirely by sewer air. It is suspected that the sewer gas contains a volatile poison, the examination and classification of which must be left to future investigators. It is more than likely that the question of sewer poisoning and drains will become the problem of the chemist instead of, as lately, the bacteriologist. In all probability the unknown substance is an organic nitrogen compound allied to hydrazine, which is known to have a powerful toxic action, so that it would not be difficult to devise experiments toward clearing up the point.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

NEW AUSTRALIAN GOLD FIELDS

The Western Provence of the Island Continent Developing Rich Deposits.

In the development of Western Australia the gold fields seem destined to play an important part. Gold was discovered there by Dampier as far back as 1688, but according to the New York Evening Post, it was not until about ten years ago that the precious metal was found in sufficient quantity to start the industry in real earnest. Today it is known that the gold country extends over a great area from north to south. New districts are being opened up, townships are being laid out, stores, hotels, churches and banks are providing for the varied wants of rapidly increasing populations, settled, in some instances, on the desert wastes of only two or three years ago, while the transcontinental railway from Fremantle to Adelaide is regarded as having already been started by the line to the Zilgarn gold fields. Southern Cross, the "capital" of this particular district and a place whose origin dates back only a few years, can now boast of being a regularly organized municipality, and its importance has been greatly increased by the opening up of the rich fields at Coolgardie, 120 miles further east, where the specimens of gold sent to London by the Western Australian government for exhibition purposes were obtained. The rainfall is, on the whole, fairly good, but there have hitherto been no efficient means taken for storing it for the dry seasons. The government, however, has resolved to construct storage tanks at a cost of $75,000, and it is hoped that the water difficulty will now soon be surmounted. In the meantime, the Western Australian press and government officials have been urging would-be gold-seekers to keep away for the present. So rapid has been the expansion of the gold diggings in the colony that the total output of gold increased in value from about $575,000 in 1891 to $2,105,000 last year, and it is expected to reach $5,000,000 this year.

Jointing Soil Pipes.

Sanitary engineers have long had a difficulty in making an effective joint between the leaden soil pipes and the stoneware of interior domestic pipes. Red lead has been generally used to render the joint gas-tight, but the junction could never really be depended upon as a soldered joint could be. A London firm has at last succeeded in soldering lead piping to stoneware by what they call a "metalloceramic" joint. After the stoneware is baked it is metallized by painting on it a belt with a composition containing platinum. The metallic band is incorporated with the body of the pottery by refiring, and thus forms a basis to which solder will firmly adhere. To show the strength of adhesiveness made possible by this device, if the band of lead soldered to the pottery be stripped off by main force the surface of the stoneware comes off with it. A convincing test of the staunchness of the joint has been given by soldering metal disks to the end of the stoneware pipe and applying hydraulic pressure. The pipe burst before the ends could be forced off.

THE TOAST OF THE NAVY

DRINK THE HEALTH OF SWEETHEARTS AND WIVES.

No Officer Ever Forgets It on Saturday Night—A Custom That Is Dear to the Hearts of the Gallant Men on Uncle Sam's Ships of War.

Every Saturday night, in every United States warship afloat, there takes place a ceremony so beautiful, so exquisite, that it seems to have escaped from the land of chivalry and wandered into American life. There, flattered and amazed at its welcome, it has remained ever since and made the men in the navy better, truer, nobler and braver. For it must be confessed that the officers are first of all splendidly American. When a ship is under way there is no woman aboard her. She has no place there. Maybe each man carries an image of one in his thoughts during his watches on deck. Of these things he does not speak. But once each week he comes forth boldly with his fellows and reverently sends greeting from across the seas to her. From the China sea, from stormy Cape Horn, from the peaceful Mediterranean comes the message.

"Sweethearts and Wives!" That was, ever and always will be the sailor's toast. And when it is given aboard Uncle Sam's ships it is a tribute to the sweetness, the purity, the beauty of American womanhood. There are men who have drunk that toast every Saturday night for more than forty years. It is never old to them. The officers would as soon think of passing unnoticed an important disciplinary regulation as passing Saturday night without this ceremony. It does not matter whether the ship is on the high seas or anchored in a foreign port, or lying at the dock in the Brooklyn navy yard, so long as her men are aboard they drink the toast. It is a custom as old as the navy. It will endure as long as the navy endures, says the Philadelphia Times.

The servants are well trained. They have the champagne nicely chilled and open it almost without orders. After the dinner is finished the executive officer arises. Very likely there is gray in his hair. His face is reddened by weather and seamed by years, for men who reach position cannot be young. But his heart is still young. They have dined well and the content of well-filled stomachs shines on their faces. But when the lieutenant commander rises they are still. He stands straight, with his hand upraised.

"Gentlemen, are your glasses charged?" There is not one which is empty. The officers rise and bow their heads in answer.

"I give you," (the lieutenant commander speaks earnestly, and there is a soft glimmer in his eye)—"I give you 'sweethearts' and wives. God bless them!"

"Sweethearts and wives—God bless them!" comes in chorus from the officers. Then they drink the wine. And if there runs down the spinal chords a little thrill, and if their eyes grow moist and their hands shake a bit, it is a tribute to themselves and to the American womanhood to whom this toast is drunk. With a something in their breast throbbing like the great engines, and the swish and gurgle of the waters dulling their ears, there is conjured before them, like the azure nimbus of a dream, a home with a soft-voiced woman and the prattling of a child, or a slender, girlish figure bending her head to hide the lovelight in her eyes. On Saturday night the officer at sea feels that he is very near home.

And then they sing sometimes; but this depends upon the men who make up the mess, because being a sailor does not make a man a singer. There is a song written by J. D. Jerrold Kelley, when he was a lieutenant; back in the '70s. This song is still popular. Now Mr. Kelley is a lieutenant commander.

Come gather round and glasses fill,
A toast we give to-night
'Tis one that made our bosoms thrill
Ere this with keen delight.
We'll drink to those we love the best,
The dear ones of our lives
Hip, hip, hurrah! give it with zest—
Our dear sweethearts and wives

Oh, pass the grog in jorums round,
Put flippers on the glass,
And drink to when we're homeward bound,
For mother, wife and lass.
Then pledge with loving heart and lip
The dear ones of our lives
Hip, hip, hurrah! Hurrah, hip, hip!
God bless sweethearts and wives.

Nearly every one will agree that this is a very good song, but, of course, one would have to hear it sung on shipboard to properly appreciate it.

Shantytown Made of Freight Cars.

One of the most curious settlements is at McAdam Junction, near the Eastern Maine border. Half a dozen old, condemned freight cars have been removed from their trucks and are snuggled together in a bizarre village. Families live therein, and children play about the doors. The squat little shantytown makes waiting at that dreary junction even more depressing. Another feature of the landscape is the Canadian Pacific "boneyard." Nearly a score of crippled, condemned and partially dismounted locomotives stand about in the field, wholly unprotected from the elements. Perhaps they're not worth roofing, but it strikes a thrifty soul rather queerly to see what represents probably half a million dollars of outlay nearly buried in ice and snow and utterly neglected.—Lewiston, Me., Journal.

Great scheme, isn't it?

Permanent Cure in Hood's

Neuralgia, Dizziness, Short Breath, Kidney Troubles Cured.

SARAH C. TRULLINGER,
Fairbury, Ill.

"I have been troubled with neuralgia in my stomach, dizziness and shortness of breath, also kidney and inward weakness. I had very bad spells with my stomach. I had to call a doctor several times and he only gave me temporary relief. I wanted something that would be a permanent cure, so my husband thought it best that I try Hood's Sarsaparilla." Before I had used one half bottle I felt like a new person, and I am glad that I can say today that I have not had a bad spell since I commenced to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. Formerly my health was so poor that I was not able to do my house-work, now I am perfectly well. I owe all the praise to Hood's Sarsaparilla." Mrs. Sarah C. Trullinger, Fairbury, Ill.

DOOM OF THE BATH TUB.

Ablution of the Future Will Be by Rain and Shower Baths.

The dwelling house of the future, constructed on scientific and hygienic principles, will be bathtubless. The porcelain-lined and zinc-lined and tin-lined tubs of to-day will be unknown. Their places will be taken by a tiled room in which will be arranged shower or rain baths at various angles. These douches will supply hot, cold or tepid water at the pleasure of the bather, and the liquid will be carried off as fast as it is used by a spacious drain pipe. The idea is not a new one, but it is a good one, and wherever it has been adopted the result has been gratifying. There are three houses in London, recently completed, supplied with this method of bathing, and there is said to be one in Philadelphia. It is not known whether the innovation has been made in New York—that is, whether there is any private dwellings fitted up with shower baths. There are several fashionable houses on Madison and Fifth avenues that have both, but it is doubtful if there is any where the tub has been abandoned altogether.

It is claimed for the rain bath that it is in every way superior to the method we have known since civilization began, and this has been proven in many public institutions. The first one ever built in America was put in the New York Juvenile asylum. The Demilt dispensary has them, and so has the bathing establishment erected by the trustees of the Baron Hirsch fund at Henry and Market streets. One of the largest rain baths in the country is now in course of construction in the state hospital for the insane at Utica, and it is predicted that within a very few years all prisons and hospitals will have adopted the system.

The most enthusiastic advocate of the rain bath is William Paul Gerhard, who has made a study of its advantages. In the first place, he says that it requires less space in the planning of a bath house, it consumes less time in application, the body of the bath does not come in contact with solid water, the mechanical and tonic effects of the descending stream is unquestionable, and cleansing and stimulating effects are greater than a bath tub, less water is required and no time is lost in waiting for the filling of a tub in houses where the supply is slow. These are a few of the reasons advanced, and Mr. Gerhard bases an elaborate argument upon them, maintaining his position throughout with a logic that is convincing and interesting.—New York Mail and Express.

Womanliness Defined.

For a Frenchman, an Italian, a Spaniard, womanliness in a woman means personification, in every individual case, of those abstract conceptions which the feminine principle eternally typifies. On the other hand, womanliness will consist, therefore, in a constant, passive charm, the human expression, as it were, of the silent allurement which nature has made, throughout all her orders, the typical attitude of the feminine. This, so to put it, is the physical characteristic. On the other hand, womanliness will mean divination of mysteries not seen by sight, nor apprehended by reason, but conveyed to woman, instinctively, by her closer contact with the most sacred and occult operations of nature, and reacting from her upon man in the form of an ethereal stimulant to finer endeavor, a vague, high promise of divine rewards. This is the spiritual characteristic. The Latin is, to both this physical and this spiritual characteristic of womanliness, more sensitive than the Anglo-Saxon. Wherefore it happens that he respects women both less and more than the Anglo-Saxon. The notion of womanliness of the Englishman, the American, is more neutral, has less of either extreme. The element of allurement, of charm, does not count so much for him—whereby it chances that, from certain aspects, his civilization is the cleaner. The spiritual characteristic predominates over the physical in his ideal. The womanly woman is the good mother, the devoted wife, the gentle sister, the quiet guardian of the hearth-fire. Yet she is not so much the holder of those mysteries of which we spoke, and thus her position, while never so low, perhaps, as it is possible for it to become with the Latin peoples, is never, either, in some sense, so high.—Alice Gorren in Scribner.

Myriads of Crows at Niagara.

An interesting sight was witnessed by the visitors at Niagara Falls recently. It was the annual migration of crows toward the South. This usually occurs in early winter, but this year, for some unknown reason, it did not occur until March 1. The crows passed southward by the million, and for two days the air was black with them and the noise of their cawing almost deafening. When they got to the falls they lit in large numbers on the ice bridge and set up a wild cawing. The sound echoed against the walls of the gorge and made a tremendous noise. When they were rested they arose, with a loud whirring of wings, and continued their flight. Many flew into the falls and were drowned.—Detroit Free Press.

London's New Underground Railroad.

The new underground railway, which is to relieve the street traffic both in the city and the West end, is to be worked upon a novel principle, which will offer every facility for quick journeying along the route of the line. The tunnel is to be made deep down in the earth, far below the deepest vaults—practically in no man's soil, where "rights" do not penetrate. The trains are to be reached from above by lifts constantly working, and there will be no delay in taking tickets and having them clipped. The passengers will enter the lift, which will descend to the cars below, where the fares will be collected.—London Court Journal.

The Cleverness of the French.

The Frenchman is a clever person, and never was that cleverness better illustrated than in the story told of Lespes, the French journalist, better known as "Timothee Trimm." One day while at work he was disagreeably intruded on by a creditor, who announced his intention of not departing until he was paid. Parley proved useless; the creditor planted himself on a chair, and Lespes beheld him, with consternation, draw bread and cheese from his pockets, as though to fortify himself against events. Several hours glided by; Lespes had resumed his writing and finished an article. The creditor showed no signs of moving, and, from the glances which he cast at a sofa, was evidently speculating what kind of a bed it would make. Suddenly Lespes rose, and with bits of newspaper began carefully blocking all the apertures which air could come into the room. He then made preparations for lighting a charcoal fire; but before applying the match pasted on the wall just opposite the creditor's eyes a paper thus laconically worded: "Take notice that we died of our own will."

"What are you doing?" exclaimed the creditor, quite uneasily.

"Your society would render life intolerable, so we are going to commit suicide together," answered Timothee, tranquilly.

It is almost needless to say that the creditor decamped.

Beefsteak Under Many Aliases.

An amiable member of the Travelers' club in this city, who possesses a minute knowledge of foreign places, is frequently consulted by friends contemplating a European tour. He brings forth his neatly kept notes of travel and gives valuable pointers concerning routes, hotels, cafes, etc. Just now he is beset with inquiries about Antwerp by intending visitors to its exposition. To one of these he imparted this hint: "In patronizing the cafes, which, in various ways, solicit the custom of English and Americans, notice the spelling of the word 'beefsteak' on the outdoor signs or bills of fare, and be governed accordingly. If you prefer French cookery, seek out restaurants where it is spelled 'biftek' or 'bifstick.' But if you wish to try a purely Flemish cuisine, look at these various ways of spelling the word, which I copied literally from signs and menus during my stay in that city: 'Beefestee,' 'beaufsteeaka,' 'beavestick,' 'biefsteck,' 'bafesteeke,' 'beevestelck,' 'biffstoake' and 'beeafesteecacke.'"—Philadelphia Record.

Malt Sprouts.

A good many farmers will not feed malt sprouts because they make the butter of inferior quality, although they increase the yield of milk. There is a vast difference in malt sprouts and only the best should be fed. When they are of good quality there is no great objection to their use. Properly combined with other foods, it will make a good ration. This is particularly true when they are fed to young animals, as they produce growth of bone and frame. It is a food largely composed of nitrogenous elements, and can be well combined with corn and ensilage, corn fodder, etc.

A Soldier's Story.

"Given up to Die" by the Doctors.

He Thanks God for Sagwa and Prays for its Success.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Aug. 15.

I deem it my duty to tender this my testimonial as an offer of gratitude for what "Kickapoo Indian Sagwa" has done for me. I came out of the army in the fall of '65, broken down by chronic dyspepsia in its worst form, and was also suffering enlargement of the heart. I consulted the best physicians and visited institutions in the East, and one and all told me the same thing—I never could get well.

By suggestion of an old comrade I took "Kickapoo Indian Sagwa," and thank God for it. Sagwa has changed my life from misery and pain to one of health and gladness, and I can now eat anything without distress. My heart is all right and my friends are astonished.

The physician who knew of my case and heard of my cure said that a medicine that is capable of making such a cure, he not only endorses but cheerfully recommends to anyone.

If this testimonial comes under the notice of any soldier who is suffering, let him take the word of an old comrade—buy a bottle of Indian Sagwa at once, and may God prosper you with the success of this remedy is the grateful prayer of

ELY'S CREAM BALM CURES
CATARRH
PRICE 50 CENTS. ALL DRUGGISTS

From away up in British North America comes the following greeting to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. Mrs. Allen Sharrard, of Hartney, Selkirk Co., Manitoba, whose portrait, with that of her little boy, heads this article, writes as follows: "I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for 'falling of the womb.' I was troubled with bearing down pains and pains in my back whenever I would be on my feet any length of time. I was recommended by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I did with happy results. I feel like a new person after taking three bottles of it."

As we have just heard from the frigid North, we will now introduce a letter received from the Sunny South. The following is from Mrs. J. T. Smith, of Oakfuskee, Cleburne Co., Ala. She writes: "I was afflicted and suffered untold pains and misery, such as no pen can describe, for six years. I was confined to bed most of the time. I expected the cold hand of death every day. I was afflicted with leucorrhea—with excessive flowing—falling of the womb—bearing down—pain in the small of my back—my bowels costive—smarting, itching and burning in the vagina, also palpitation of the heart. When I began taking your medicine I could not sit up, only a few minutes at a time, it was so weak. I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription three times per day and one of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery three times per day and one of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets every night. I have taken seven bottles of the 'Discovery,' seven bottles of the 'Prescription' and five bottles of the 'Pellets.' I took these medicines seven months, regularly, never missed a day. These medicines cured me. I feel as well as I ever did in my life. Four of the best doctors in the land treated my case four years. They all gave me up as hopeless—they said I could not be cured, and could not live. Through the will of God, and your medicines, I have been restored to the best of health." Yours truly,

Mrs J. T. Smith

Mrs. W. O. Gunckel, of No. 1601 South Seventh Street, Terre Haute, Indiana, writes: "I had been suffering from womb trouble for eight years having doctored with the most skillful physicians, but finding only temporary relief from medicine prescribed by them. I was advised by a friend to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I did, and found, in taking six bottles of the 'Prescription' and two of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' that it has effected a positive cure, for which words cannot express my gratitude for the relief from the great suffering that I so long endured." Yours truly,

W. O. Gunckel

As a powerful, invigorating, restorative tonic "Favorite Prescription" improves digestion and nutrition thereby building up solid, wholesome flesh, and increases the strength of the whole system. As a soothing and strengthening nervine "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, Chorea, or St. Vitus's Dance, and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency. Even insanity, when dependent upon womb disease in its origin, is often cured by it.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a scientific medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, due to pregnancy, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use will prove very beneficial.

Dr. Pierce's Book, (168 pages, illustrated) on "Woman and Her Diseases," giving successful means of Home Treatment, will be mailed in plain envelope, securely sealed from observation on receipt of ten cents to pay postage. See the Doctor's address near the head of this article.

WORK OF CONGRESS

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, May 17.—The Democratic leaders in the senate decided yesterday to call up Senator Harris' resolution for 10 o'clock sessions to-day. They have reached the conclusion that the tariff bill is not making satisfactory progress, and think that the time has come when they should extend the hours. The resolution is likely to lead to a spirited debate when called up. Republican senators held a second conference yesterday upon the policy to be pursued regarding the tariff bill. No conclusion was reached, but the majority showed a desire to let the bill come to a vote as soon as opportunity had been given for reasonable debate.

In the senate the Jones amendment fixing the rate of duty on flaxseed oil at 20 cents was agreed to. The rate on olive oil, reduced in the original senate bill to 25 per cent, was restored to 35 cents per gallon. The house rate on peppermint oil—25 per cent—was also restored. In the next paragraph, opium extracts for medicinal uses the house rate was 25 per cent. The senate amendment made it 20 per cent. The senate reduction was agreed to. The next—Jones' amendment—was to place crude opium, not adulterated, containing 9 per cent or over of morphia, dutiable at $1 per pound in the house bill, on the free list. Mr. Shermen then moved to increase the duty on smoking opium from $6 to $10 a pound. Lost—20 to 31.

After transacting business of minor importance, the house went into committee of the whole on the agricultural appropriation bill. Mr. Marsh of Illinois severely denounced the practice of the agricultural department of collecting and publishing statistics of crops, upon which speculators were enabled to manipulate the grain and cotton markets. His amendment to strike out the paragraph providing for the publication of monthly crop reports was defeated—76 to 28. Mr. Marsh made the point of no quorum and tellers were appointed. A quorum was finally secured and the amendment was lost—45 to 137. Mr. Pickler (Rep., S. D.) endeavored to secure an appropriation of $50,000 for another edition of the special report on diseases of the horse, but it was ruled out on a point of order. Mr. Pickler offered an amendment increasing the appropriation for the purchase, propogation and distribution of seed from $130,000 to $160,000. Agreed to. An amendment was agreed to providing that after May 1 the secretary of agriculture should distribute all the seeds on hand, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by senators and representatives in congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department.

Washington, May 18.—The resolution introduced by Senator Lodge to investigate the charges of attempted bribery of Senators Kyle and Hunton, also the allegations that the sugar trust had made contributions to campaign funds, was discussed in the senate to-day, and passed with amendments that broadens its scope. Senators Cockrell, Hoar, Chandler, Faulkner and Vilas offered amendments which made the resolution a veritable drag-net, including all charges of bribery, all allegations of contributions by the sugar trust, directly or indirectly, to campaign committees, or used in elections by either party, or that any senator had in any way been improperly influenced in the tariff legislation. Senator Hansbrough read a letter from Buttz asking for an investigation. Senator Hunton asked a speedy investigation, as did Senators Harris and Allen, in behalf of Senator Kyle, who was absent, and declared that he would demand an investigation. The vice president announced the appointment of the following committee in accordance with the terms of the Lodge resolution: Messrs. Gray, Lindsay, Lodge, Allen and Davis.

Mr. Harris, the floor manager of the tariff bill, moved that the senate take a recess until to-morrow morning, with the intention of continuing the legislative day and for the consideration of the tariff bill to the exclusion of all other legislative business. This meant the inauguration of the policy of duress that made famous the struggle over the federal election bill, the bill to repeal the Sherman law and other big legislative contests in the senate. The Republicans, under the leadership of Mr. Manderson, vainly protesting that they did not seek to delay action on the tariff bill. They used the usual filibustering methods, breaking a quorum by refusing to vote, although certain their Western colleagues would decline to join in the filibuster. Mr. Harris moved to compel the attendance of the absentees. After some very sharp and plain talk on both sides the Republicans succeeded in forcing an adjournment, although the battle was in reality a drawn one. A compromise had been practically agreed upon before adjournment by which the sessions of the senate are to begin at 10 o'clock after Monday. Senators on both sides regard this as the real beginning of the siege of night sessions and roll-calls, a test of physical endurance on one side and of resistance on the other which all have understood from the beginning would be resorted to before the end of the tariff debate should be reached. The Republicans generally assert that they will resist unusual hours or extraordinary proceedings, and the Democrats say that it has become evident from long speeches made to-day and on other days recently that unless hours are extended the disposal of the bill will be indefinitely delayed.

Among the bills favorably reported in the house was a bill by Mr. Chickering of New York, from the committee on railways and canals, to inquire into the feasibility of constructing a ship canal from the Hudson river to the great lakes. After the call of committees, the house went into committee of the whole to consider the agricurture appropriation bill.

Washington, May 19.—White winged peace hovered over the senate to-day. As a result of the compromise reached yesterday the resolution to inaugurate longer hours, beginning next Monday, commencing at 10 a. m., was agreed to, and then the senate for the first time since the tariff debate began, settled down to real earnest work on the schedules of the tariff. For five hours the consideration was steadily pushed, the result being that eleven pages of the bill were disposed of. More progress than has been made in the entire three weeks during which the bill has been considered by paragraphs. The chemical schedule, excepting items 84 to 92, inclusive, which were passed over by agreement, was finished. Schedule C, metals and manufactures of iron and steel had been reached when the senate went into executive session. The Republicans won their first victory to-day in their efforts to secure higher rates than those granted by the majority. They induced the Democrats to take rough building and monumental stone, lime stone, free stone, granite, sandstone, etc., from the free list and place them on the dutiable list at 7c per cubic foot, and to increase the duty on this class of dressed stone from 20 to 30 per cent ad valorem. The feature of the day was the denial of half a dozen Republican senators that any agreement had been reached to allow the bill to ultimately come to a vote, and the bold announcement of Messrs. Frye of Maine and Dolph of Oregon that they stood ready to go any length and use any parliamentary methods to defeat the bill.

The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was taken up in the house to-day. The discussion of the bill opened up several interesting and important questions, among them being the sugar bounty, the pension frauds investigation and the reduction of the members' pay for absence.

Washington, May 21.—The senate began the seventh week of the discussion of the tariff bill to-day at 10 o'clock by taking up the metal schedule, and the prospect is now that the entire week will be devoted to the tariff without attempting any other business than that which can be done in the first half-hour of the daily sessions and possibly an occasional brief executive session after 6 o'clock for the disposition of uncontested nominations. Senator Harris to-day reaffirmed his intention of pressing the bill forward as rapidly as it may be possible to do so, but he said he had no idea of an attempt to extend the daily sessions beyond 6 o'clock so long as the work should go on as satisfactorily as it is going at present. He expressed the opinion that the Republican senators who have been opposing the bill, and apparently seeking to delay its passage had decided to change their policy and to let the bill proceed upon its passage after giving the various items of difference the attention demanded by their merits, and instanced the fact noticeable on Friday and Saturday that there had been a decided cessation of long speeches and of roll calls as well. This change in the course of those of the opponents of the bill who have sought to put obstacles in the way of its progress, the Democrats attribute to the two facts that their opponents have discovered that they mean to pass the bill, and that the Republican conferences of the past week have developed a decided sentiment in the Republican party on the question of delay, with, as they think, a majority opposed to all dilatory tactics.

The state bank issue which has been gathering strength at caucuses and conferences ever since congress assembled, was taken up to-day in the house and promises to be fought to a finish this week. It will bring out a sharp contest on party as well as economic lines, as the state bank plank of the Democratic national platform has advanced the question to a place of importance second only to those of the tariff and silver.

MISSING THOUSANDS.

Are Depositors and Bank Employes Implicated in Keene's Crime?

New York, May 21.—Bookkeeper J. J. Keene, of the late Harlem River bank, has not yet been found by the officers, who have warrants for his arrest for an alleged theft of from $20,000 to $30,000 of the bank's money. The examiners have a theory that either depositors or one of the employes of the bank must have been in collusion with Keene, in order to enable him to successfully falsify his accounts. Senator Lexow, counsel for the receiver, said that no director or stockholder was suspected as being implicated. This was taken to mean that depositors and shareholders might be implicated. The missing bookkeeper has been married within a month. It was stated that no warrants for the officers or directors of the bank would be asked for. If any further warrants are issued they will be for employes, not officers. Bookkeeper Keene left town Wednesday night, telling the people with whom they boarded that they would be gone only a few days.

LIFE SAVERS DIE.

Four Drowned in Attempting to Rescue the Crew of a Schooner.

Port Huron, Mich., May 21.—The tug J. D. Thompson left here at 9 o'clock last night with a rescuing yawl, and attempted to reach the schooner Schupe on a sand reef six miles north of here, and about a quarter of a mile from shore. The yawl left the tug and finally reached the wreck. The painter from the yawl was taken by the crew aboard the Schupe, when the yawl capsized, throwing the whole party into the water. There were five of them, and all were drowned except Dan Lynn, who swam ashore and was taken out of the water nearly exhausted. The men drowned are William Lewis, single; Capt. Henry Little, married, a nephew of Capt. Little, of the Schupe; Capt. Barney Mills, married; August King, married.

Nipped in the Bud.

St. Louis, May 21.—Now that J. B. Breeding has been arrested in San Antonio, Tex., charged with the forgery of the Wells-Fargo Express company money orders, it has been learned here that if the swindling firm of Trend, Smith & Foster had been allowed a few days it would have reaped a fortune. There are about 300 registered and ordinary mail letters at the St. Louis postoffice addressed to the firm, and these letters are known to contain drafts and currency amounting to $20,000, but not one was delivered. The funds at the postoffice are remittances from banks to which the firm sent its forged money orders for collection.

An Ohio Scorching.

Akron, May 21.—The business portion of this city was threatened with destruction last night, and had it not been for the heavy rains many blocks would have been destroyed. The planing mill of Weary, Snyder & Wilcox and the two livery stables of Charles Dietz and Edward Insando were burned. Besides these, the brick block of B. F. Crumwine and brick warehouse of Herrick & Son were destroyed and several large blocks were badly damaged. Total loss, $200,000.

TOWNS UNDER WATER

TERRIFIC FLOODS NOW PREVAIL IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The Susquehanna and Tributaries Are Out of Their Banks, and Many Towns and Hamlets Are Flooded—The Water Still Rising.

Williamsport, Pa., May 21.—With the terrors of the disastrous flood of 1889, which spread death and destruction throughout this valley brought back to memory by the threatened danger of a sweep of water that promises to be as great as that of five years ago, the people of this city and all through the West Branch valley are in a state of panic that has turned the usually quiet Sunday into one of remarkable excitement. Since Friday night a steady and almost continuous downpour of rain has been swelling all the streams, and late last night numerous cloud-bursts along the Pine creek and other tributaries of the West Branch of the Susquehanna have made it impossible to confine the water within the banks of the streams. It has therefore spread out over the country and at every point is pouring into the main river. Throughout the day the rain has fallen here and still continues. Advices from all points up the river say the same conditions exist. A cloud-burst at Keating, twenty miles above Renovo, early this morning raised the river there twenty feet, and the river at Renovo is reported higher than in the flood of 1889, when half the town was under water. Above there and extending to the headwaters at Clearfield, every town and Hamlet has been reduced by water to the conditions that prevailed in 1889. The Susquehanna flows to the south of the city, and while it has not yet reached the point of danger, it is crawling up at the rate of a foot an hour. Graffus run, a tributary which empties into the river below the city, overflowed its banks and spread over a considerable portion of the city yesterday, flooding many houses and driving the occupants from their homes. All of the houses were occupied by poor people and the rise was so sudden that the sufferers lost much of their personal property. In the hundreds of homes that were submerged five years ago the people are moving out and storing their goods in the houses of those living on the highlands. The business part of the city was a complete wreck five years ago and hundreds of merchants are moving their stock to places of safety. Conveyances of every description are hurrying through the streets of the city loaded with household goods and merchandise and the scenes beggar description. Four miles of track of the Glenallen Lumber company have been swept away. The boom at Lockhaven was broken and 15,000,000 feet of logs have been lost. The upper Linden boom also broke yesterday afternoon. It contained 10,000,000 feet of logs and they have gone down. There are about 150,000,000 feet of logs in the main boom and half as many more in the city mill ponds that may go on a twenty-five-foot flood.

Bradford, Pa., May 21.—The worst flood in Bradford's history is rushing through Tuna valley to-day. Twenty streets contingent to the creek are inundated and hundreds of families are in the swim.

Philadelphia, May 21.—The Western Union force at Lockhaven was driven from the office by the flood, and since then nothing has been heard from that point. The office is located in the center of the town some distance from the river, and the destruction of property must therefore be very great.

FIRE IN PHILADELPHIA.

Property Valued at Half a Million Dollars Destroyed.

Philadelphia, May 21—Fire consumed $525,000 worth of store property to-day in the heart of the business section of the city. The flames were discovered in the cellar of the store of the Julius Sichel company, dealers in dry goods and millinery, 50, 52 and 54 North Eighth street and 806 Arch street. Before the department arrived the flames had communicated with the upper floors through an elevator shaft, and the entire property was gutted. The fire quickly sperad to the wholesale millinery and straw goods establishment of L. Dannenbaums' Son & Co., adjoining on Arch street, and their stock and building were totally destroyed. The two buildings belonged to the estate of Morris Dannenbaum. The flames were confined to these two buildings, but adjoining buildings on Arch and Eighth streets suffered loss by fire, smoke and water. The origin of the fire is unknown. The losses are as follows: Julius Sehiel & Co. $125,000; partly insured. L. Dannenbaum's Son & Co., $150,000; partly insured. Estate of Morris Dannenbaum, $175,000; fully insured. J. O. Bently, $25,000; William Encke & Bros., $5,000; Nonotuck Silk company, $15,000; John W. Leemaistre, $20,000; Gerin & Sons, $25,000; William Kenath, $5,000.

No Nuns Will Teach.

Gallitzin, Pa., May 21. — The public schools here, which were closed by an injunction secured by the Junior Order of American Mechanics on account of nuns teaching therein, clothed in the garb of their religious order, were opened to-day and will complete the school year. The teachers will not be nuns; however, the board of directors having engaged a complete new corps of teachers.

Illicit Love and Murder.

Nevada, Mo., May 21.—A terrible tragedy was enacted at Rinehart, fifteen miles northwest of this place, this morning. William Perdue shot and killed A. W. Rundle and then set fire to Rundle's house and shot and killed himself. Rundle was an excellent citizen and fifty-eight years of age. His murderer was a single man thirty-five years old. The cause of the crime was Perdue's intimacy with Rundle's wife, which had existed for more than a year.

Ladies Elect Officers.

St. Paul, May 21.—Late Saturday the Grand International Auxiliary of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers elected the following officers: President, Mrs. W. A. Murdock of Chicago; vice president, Mrs. E. M. Cassell of Columbus, Ohio; secretary, Mrs. Harris St. Clair of Logansport, Ind.; treasurer, Mrs. Christinna Brow of Detroit, Mich.; chaplain, Mrs. F. S. Browley of San Francisco; guide, Mrs. Andrew Earhart of Rochester, N. Y.; sentinel, Mrs. J. Frank Cook of Concord, N. H.; editress, Mrs. Bert C. Webb of Atlanta, Ga.

WEALERS BAGGED.

Coxeyites Capture Another Northern Pacific Train.

Helena, Mont., May 21.—About a hundred commonwealers took possession of an east-bound Northern Pacific freight at Heron, a station 150 miles west of Missoula. They locked the conductor and engineer in the caboose, and the Coxeyites, who had experienced railroad men among them, started the train eastward at thirty miles an hour. At Trout Creek, twenty-five more commonwealers were taken aboard. Thompson Falls and Hersh Plains were passed without stopping. Where rails had been taken up the commonwealers replaced them by taking up rails behind their train. They also put in two hours removing a caved embankment. When Sheriff Ramsey of Missoula heard of the train stealing he collected a posse of forty deputies and with Supt. Brimson, of the Northern Pacific, started west to catch them, but they soon got orders from General Superintendent Kimberly to leave them to the United States marshal. The sheriff and his deputies were then converted into United States deputy marshals and at Arlee they captured the entire outfit. Several rails had been taken up at that place and the commonwealers were relaying them when the deputies arrived. Some of the commonwealers ran, but were pursued on horses and captured. They are under guard in a freight house and will be brought to Helena to answer the charge of contempt of the United States court.

ANOTHER NEW PARTY.

Friends of Commonwealers Begin to Organize.

Des Moines, May 21.—A scheme is on foot to perpetuate the commonweal movement. A meeting of the leaders will be held in Des Moines to form a national association. The Olney brothers and others of 507 Mulberry street have charge of the local end of the movement, and last evening at a meeting in Trade Assembly hall many laboring men signed an agreement to join the contemplated association. The Olney brothers say they have already local associations in San Francisco, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, Ogden, Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Paul, Cleveland, Columbus, and, in fact, many of the large cities of the country. They say that the order, which is to be of a political nature, will be as rapid in its growth as the A. P. A., but, unlike that order, will have nothing to do with religious subjects. It will invite the laboring and poorer classes to gather and force congress and state legislatures to accede to their demands. Within two or three days a call will be issued for a national convention to be held here at which some fifty promoters of the movement which they say will sweep the country and exterminate the two old parties will be present and form a national association. The association already has 590 members in Des Moines. Gen. J. B. Weaver and his friends are in it, but are as yet in the background.

HE LOSES HIS HEAD.

Emile Henri, The Bomb Thrower, is Guillotined.

Paris, May 21.—Emile Henri, the author of the explosion in the cafe of the Hotel Terminus, was gulletined at 4:14 this morning. As Henri emerged from the prison gates he shouted: "Vive la anarchie," which he repeated just before he was seized and thrown on the guillotine. There was no disorder. President Carnot yesterday refused a reprieve. M. Deibler, the public executioner, and the director of the prison De la Roquette were at once notified of the president's decision and Deibler at once began his preparations for setting up the guillotine in the Place De la Roquette. Every precaution was taken to guard against disorder.

EDMUND YATES DEAD.

The Well Known Author and Editor Dies Suddenly.

London, May 21.—Edmund Hodgson Yates, editor and proprietor of the World, died to-day. Mr. Yates was the son of the well known actor and was for some years chief of the missing letter department in the postoffice. He was a theatrical critic on the Daily News for six years and was himself the author of several dramas. In May, 1872, Mr. Yates retired from the postoffice in order to devote himself exclusively to literature. In the course of that year he went on a lecturing tour in the United States, and in May, 1873, he was appointed London representative of the New York Herald, which post he resigned in July, 1874, when he established the World. Mr. Yates was in 1884 indicted for having published in his paper a libel on the earl of Lonsdale, for which, as editor, he was responsible. He was sentenced to four months' imprisonment but was released before two months had expired. He was the author of many novels.

A Boy Captain Dead.

Decorah, Iowa, May 21.—This community was greatly shocked by the sudden death of Capt. George Q. Gardner, cashier of the First National bank. He was found lying on a sofa in the directors' room of the bank. The cause of his death was heart disease. Capt. Gardner became commander of the Fifth Wisconsin battery in the War of the Rebellion when he was only eighteen years of age, and he was known as the boy captain. He has been with the First National bank twenty-six years, and was a very popular man. His remains will be taken to Monroe, Wis., for burial.

Cubans Uprising Again.

Washington, May 21.—It is reported in inner diplomatic circles that another uprising in Cuba is imminent and that the Cubans are receiving material assistance in the form of money and munitions of war, as well as in the shape of advice and suggestions from their countrymen in the United States.

Woeful Lack of Dignity.

Rome, May 21.—During the hearing of the Banco Romane case to-day ex-Minister Miceli sprang at Bank Inspector Biagini, who was on the witness stand. A fierce fight ensued and a riot broke out in court, which had to adjourn.

Deadly Winds in Texas.

Dallas, Tex., May 21.—A storm near Waxahachie last night destroyed the house of a farmer named Merriam, killing himself and wife, and badly injuring his three children and two young men stopping there.

RAINS CAUSE FLOODS

GREAT DAMAGE ALONG RIVERS IN WISCONSIN.

Dams, Bridges, Factories and Houses Swept Away, Causing a Loss of Millions of Dollars—Bad Floods Throughout Minnesota.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., May 17.—A terrible rain and electrical storm passed over this city early last evening, and for a few hours rain fell in torrents. The streets were like small rivers and the sewers were unable to carry off the tremendous quantity of water. About 8 o'clock a telegram was received from Bloomer stating that the dam on Duncan creek at that place had gone out. Immediately the mayor collected several men and made arrangements to secure the several bridges on the creek in this city, knowing that there would be danger when the water reached here.

About 4 o'clock the wave reached here, and the river immediately rose twelve feet, taking out five bridges on the creek and the trestle of the Wisconsin Central railway which crosses it. The large brick barn of Dr. C. A. Hayes was undermined and toppled into the stream, as did also a part of Siegert's restaurant. Several small buildings along the stream were also taken out and the River street pavement was floated for several blocks. A telegram later from Bloomer stated that the planing mill there had gone out, together with a large quantity of timber. News was received early this morning that the saw mill dam, lumber, and the whole winter's cut of logs belonging to F. G. and C. A. Stanley at Chippewa City, had gone out, entailing a loss of probably $40,000.

Later reports state that the flood loss in the Chippewa valley is estimated at $2,000,000. At Bloomer, the dam, saw mill, planing mill, bridges houses and 6,000,000 feet of logs were carried away. No lives were lost.

In Chippewa Falls, damage was done to the extent of $500,000 to the streets, bridges and railway property. The city suffers the loss of five bridges, cutting off traffic with the Omaha road, and the loss of the gas works. The Chippewa Logging and Boom company's office building, barn and mill are afloat, also the American house, Box & Squire, Lang Brothers, S. F. Martin, E. Hodge, Good Luck company, postoffice and Panier wagon works; also the woolen mill sash and door company and many small buildings and residences situated on the creek.

At Chippewa City, six miles north, the saw mill, dams, barns, lumber yards, and in fact almost the whole city, are completely washed out, together with 6,000,000 feet of logs.

Great damage is reported all along the Chippewa and Black rivers.

St. Paul, May 17.—Reports from various portions of the state show that much damage was done by Tuesday night's storm. Stillwater was again visited, and a number of houses wrecked, streets were torn up and railroads washed out. There were washouts on nearly every road in the central and southern portions of the state. Around St. Cloud there were many bad washouts.

Red Wing, Minn., May 18.—Reports received to-day give some account of the disaster by Tuesday's storm in Pierce county, Wisconsin, across the river from this city. Rush river rose high above its banks, carrying along every bridge from head waters to the Mississippi. At Martell El Paso and other places flouring and saw mills were swept along by the flood, entailing losses of which no accurate estimate can be formed. Three farm houses, with the occupants, are said to have been washed away by the flood, but the report cannot yet be substantiated. One dwelling was seen going down the river past Martelle. The lamp was burning in the house and it is supposed the family was within. The valley of the Rush river is the scene of complete devastation, and buildings not wiped away by the stream are in many instances ruined and covered with mud. Stocks of merchandise in several stores are a total loss. From meager reports it would seem that the loss would reach $100,000 or more. Among the property destroyed are the Winger mills at Martelle, owned by Harper, Nelson. The flood was caused mainly by numerous mill dams breaking.

Hudson, Wis., May 18.—The mill dams on Willow river have been carried away and this morning word has been received from Burkhardt, Jewett, Green's and other localities that the water reached there about 8 o'clock, and was soon over the big dam, carrying away thousands of tons of earth. The Omaha main line, about 500 feet distant, was next undermined carrying away the massive stone abutments which rise twenty-five feet above the water's edge. The Tower foot bridge has also been undermined and may wash down the river at any time. All the Omaha officials are on the spot. Capt. Scott estimates the damage to the road at $75,000, and traffic is interrupted for two weeks. The loss along the river will amount to at least $100,000. The fish hatcheries at this point are under ten feet of running muddy water.

Stillwater, Minn., May 18.—Officials of the St. Paul & Duluth road here say that no train on the road will be in for several days. A pile driver is putting pile in one wash-out 200 feet long and thirty feet deep. The street force in the city is increased to-day, all idle men being employed.

Kendall Pedaled Faster.

Howard, S. D., May 18.—Fully 200 people witnessed a bicycle race here yesterday afternoon between Sloan of Mitchell, champion Victor rider of the state, and Kendall, champion rider of this place. Kendall won the second and third three-mile heats and the race. The prize was a gold watch.

The Rockford Gazette.

Allison, Iowa, May 18.—The Rockford Publishing company, recently incorporated at Rockford, Iowa, has purchased a new outfit to be used in the publication of the Rockford Gazette. E. W. We having a fine sample of weather the past week,

C, A. Brink was at Grand Forks last Friday on business.

E, M. Hoff was at Thief River Falls the first of the week on business.

Felix Fournet, of Crookston, was doing business in town today.

George Ossman was doing business in town the first of the week.

S. M. Dainard and wife were at Crookston a couple of days last week.

J. A. Dainard was at Crookston on business last Saturday.

Miss Lizzie Zarracher spent Sunday with her parents at Crookston,

Deputy Sheriff Losey was doing business in town last Monday,

Louis Gouler, of Crookston, was in town the first of the week,

Col. Stranahan is working on the finest and largest garden in town.

O. F. Post was doing business at Thief River Falls last Saturday,

The trees are putting on their summer suit and the country looks much better,

Mr. Kennison and Miss LaBree, of Thief River Falls, were in town this afternoon.

C. G. Rapp returned today from Goodhue county where he has been visiting for the past ten days.

Coxey and Brown go to jail but Breckenridge goes home for a renomination to congress. Moral; Don't walk on the grass,

Can Patterson has carpenters at work on an addition to his dwelli , He is building a good sized addition and will have a neat dwelling when completed.

Ed Whaley was Crookston the first of the week and received twenty dollars for wolf scalps, Ed is doing a good business hunting wolves this spring.

The train was several hours late last Monday. The delay was caused by distributing several cars of ties between here and Shirley.

Christ Sandmoen and Peter Brandy started by boat for Rainy Lake. They took the boat by team east of here to the high landing.

We publish this week in another column the peoples party call for a county convention to meet at Crookston June 29th.

R, H, Aimer and H. H. Cavanaugh started this morning for the Rainy Lake gold fields, They will start from Thief River Falls with a boat and will make the entire trip by water, going up the Red Lake river, across Red Lake, up the Tamarac, down the big Fork and up the Rainy river to destination. The trip will take two or three weeks,

We learn that C. A. Brink has refused to handle the McCormick machinery here the coming year, The company have been trying to give Charley much the worst of it, in contracting for this season so he concluded to have nothing more to do with them, He has been their agent here for the past eight years and has sold a large number of machines, The company have had several representatives here this week trying to a new agent but up to date no one will handle their machines, and they will have hard work to do business here this season.

We have not been instructed to make the announcement but still we understand that Hon. E. E. Lommen will be before the Peoples party convention at Crookston next month as a candidate for the nomination to congress. We believe that if Mr. Lommen secures the delegation from this county he stands an excellent chance to receive the nomination. Mr. Lommen is one of our best men, He has been a member of the party since it was organized and has always been found true to the cause. During the two winters he served in the state senate he did excellent work and he has never been accused of any kind of, jobbery or corruption. We believe in nominating, first, men of ability, second, men whose integrity and honesty are beyond question; and third, men who will faithfully serve the people in carrying out the principles of the party which elects them. We believe Mr, Lommen will meet these requirements and he should have a solid delegation from Polk county.

The St. Hilaire Spectator says that the pops have three living candidates for congressmen in Polk county, viz: A. R. Holston, E. E. Lommen, and Andrew Steenerson, and urges the party to take its strongest man and a Polk county man. We suggest A, R. Holston as his experiance with C. P. DeMers seems to justify us in the idea that he would be the strongest man to make the race—that experiance demonstrated that he ain't worth a cent to fight, and he ought to be strong to make the run on the theory that every man is good for something.—Polk County Journal.

Without the public schools, says Ignatius Donnelly, the republic could not survive for a single generation. They will last as long as the republic endures. They are the poor man's college, superior to the universities of the old world, They are the highest exemplification of the best paternalism —that paternalism which takes money from the pockets of the rich to educate the children of the poor. The allotment of a portion of any school fund to any church would be the most damaging blow that could be aimed against it The public schools are the destroyers of race prejudice, social caste and religious bigotry, They teach true democracy, whose foundation is respect for the opinions of others.—Prison Mirror.

The bill of Representative Crain, of Texas, to change the date of the meetings of congress has been favorably reported to the house and should pass without objection. It provides that the first session of each congress shall begin the first Tuesday after March 4 instead of waiting until the following December The second session is to begin on the first Monday in January instead of December, as at present. Under the present plan scarcely anything is done until after the holiday recess, and thus at least a month's time is wasted. The last session of each congress, too, is marked by the most scandalous neglect of public duty, as those members who have failed of a re-election take no interest in public affairs and presistently absent themselves from the sittings. The proposed amendment to the law would doubtless have a salutary effect. St, Paul Globe.

A Washington special says that Congressman Baldwin of Minnesota has applied to the general land office for the appointment of agents to prevent whole sale timber thefts in the Chippewa pine lands, reports having come to him from Thief River Falls announcing extensive depredations, although an agent sent into the woods reports that no timber is being stolen. Congressman Baldwin insists that his authority is better than that of the government inspector and claims that a large amount of timber has been unlawfully cut. An investigation will probably follow and terminate as all such investigations usually do.—Lumberman.

Half Fare Home Seekers' Excursion.

On May 21st the various railways will sell half-fare round-trip 30 day stop off tickets to points in Minnesota, Dakota and Montana located on Great Northern Railway. This will give home-seekers and prospectors a chance to visit western points, including the famous Red River and Flathead valleys as well as the new placer gold fields near Glasgow, Chinook and Havre, Montana. One fare for round trip.

Apply to your local agent, and see that your tickets read via the Great Northern Railway from St, Paul westward,

The U. S. Agricultural weather crop bulletin for Minnesota has the following to say in regard to crops in the Red River Valley:

The weather conditions in the Red River Valley were on the whole rather favorable for the growing crops. There were general showers throughout this region on Tuesday and Wednesday with the temperature above the average The latter half of the week was dry and cool. On sandy soil the high winds the early part of the week slightly injured the crops but the damage from this cause is not marked. Frost Thursday and Friday nights did but slight damage as vegitation generally was not far enough advanced to be materially affected. The wheat seeding is practically finished, and the farmers are now busy finishing up barley and oats, and in the southern part of the district advancing with corn, potatoes and garden planting, The first sown small grain is coming up even and looks well, and pasturage is also reported in good condition.

Billy Double the well known dry goods salesman, was in town a short time today, but William was in considerable of a hurry as he has been doing a star engagement with the "Black Crook" company the past week and is now compelled to make three towns a day to make up for lost time.

Polk county will have 68 delegates in peoples party state convention. This will be the second largest delegation in the convention, Hennepin county casting the largest peoples party vote in the state and Polk county second,

Peoples Party Co. Convention.

Pursuant to the resolutions of the peoples party county central committee of Polk county Minnesota; notice is hereby given that a county convention of the of the peoples party of said county will be held at the court house in the city of Crookston in said county on the 29th day of June 1894 at 10 o'clock a. m. to place in nomination candidates for the following offices viz: County auditor, treasurer, sheriff, register of deeds, county attorney, clerk of court, judge of probate, superintendent of schools, county surveyor, court commissioner, and county commissioners for the second and fourth commissioners districts and to elect delegates to the state convention of the peoples party to be held at Minneapolis Minnesota on or about the 12th day of July 1894 and to elect delegates to the peoples party congressional convention in and for the 7th congressional district of Minnesota, and to the peoples party legislative convention in and for the 51st legislative district of Minnesota which two last conventions are hereafter to be called; and to appoint a new peoples party county committee and to transact such other business as may properly come before the convention.

The basis of representation will be one delegate for each election precinct in said county and one delegate for fifty votes or major fraction thereof cast for Ignatius Donnelly for governor at the general election in 1892. The several towns and villages in this vicinity are entitled to the following number of delegates in said convention viz:

Black River	1
Bray	1
Emardville	1
Gervais	2
Gordon	2
North	2
Nesmedal	1
Polk Center	1
River Falls	2
Rocksbury	2
St. Hilaire	1
Sanders	2
Wyandotte	1

The total vote in the county will be 128.

The towns and villages which may have been detatched from other towns since the last general election will vote with the towns from which they were detatched in the election of delegates. We would urge the populists of each town to see that their town is represented at the convention with the full number of delegates to which it is entitled. Proxies will not be recognized except where the delegate and his proxie both are legal voters residing in the same town or election precinct. The committees of the several towns, cities and villages are requested to give public notice of the time when and the place where the caucuses are to be held for the election of delegates by posting at least three notices thereof in three of the most public places in the precinct at least ten days before the caucus is to be held

At the several caucuses in each town or ward the voters present shall elect a peoples party town or ward committee of three members and report their names and post office address to the chairman of the county committee. Only legal voters who believe in the principles and the platform of the peoples party. both state and national, and who agree to vote for the peoples party candidates that may be nominated by the several peoples party conventions are eligable to vote in the caucus or to be elected delegates.

Dated this 14th day May 1894.

The Fergus Falls Globe gives a note of timely warning against fusion with the democrats, That is right we want no fusion and what is more we won't have it with either of the two old parties. We will put up a straight populist ticket from governor to coroner and if the democrats are tired sick and disgusted with the democratic party we would be pleased to have them vote with us; but no democrats or half baked populists should be placed on our ticket, Men and bretheren keep your eyes and ears open and be ready to jump on all fusion and fusionists with both feet, We believe however that the Globe is wrong in claiming that Mr. Donnelly favors fusion. We think Mr, Donnelly is against the nomination of any democrat for any office on the populist ticket In this year when the democratic party is a stench in the nostrils of the people for a reform party to fuse with it would be as though a young man should wed a festering corpse. The cause of reform would under such a union die from blood poisoning. The populist party is in many states suffering from the effects of being bitten by this old copper-head party and we trust that the leaders will keep in the middle of the road and not lead the people out in the dismal swamp of democracy, where the venomous hydraheaded fusion reptile lurks, ready to bite or to charm and swallow the party of reform into the capacious paunch of the democracy where several other reform parties have been laid to rest.—Crookston Tribune.

OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Of the Board of County Commissioners of Polk County.

The board of county commissioners of Polk county met pursuant to call on the 2d day of May, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., all members present. The minutes of the two previous meetings were read, and on motion the same was approved.

Hearing was set at the next meeting of the board in the matter of the petition of Silas H. Kennedy, asking to detach the e½ nw¼ and nw¼ ne¼, sec 19, township 147, range 40.

A hearing having been set for this meeting on the individual petitions of R. Reierson and Saue Fishback, and no one appearing to remonstrate it was ordered that the se¼ and the e½sw and ne¼, sec 13, township 147, range 41, be detached from school district No. 134 and same attached to district No. 197.

The erroneous assessments on lot 7, block 1, Stearns addition, and lot 12, block 2, McManus' addition, was ordered corrected.

The county road and bridge committee was authorized to investigate the condition of the county bridges located between sections 1 and 36, Rooms and Fisher townships, and between sections 3 and 4, Fairfax township, with power to act.

The bridge petition from Bygland township was rejected.

The following appropriations out of the road and bridge fund were made in favor of the following townships as follows:

Andover township 150 dollars for repairing bridges; Crookston township 150 dollars for road, districts No. 1 and 3; Belgium 50 dollars; Euclid 100 dollars; Lambert 125 dollars; Louisville 100 dollars for a ferry and 50 dollars for a bridge; Terrebonne 100 dollars; Columbia 165 dollars; Grove Park 75 dollars; Winger 75 dollars; Badger 150 dollars, of which 100 dollars is for county road and 50 dollars on town roads; Lessor township 100 dollars to be expended as follows: On bills not to exceed 35 dollars, and 25 dollars for ditching and grading road between se¼ sec 31, and sw¼ sec 32, in township 149, range 41, and on the ne¼ sec 1, town of Knute, and on the nw¼ sec 6, King township, the balance of said appropriation to be expended at the discretion of the supervisors of said Lessor township. To Nesbit township 100 dollars; to Roome township 100 dollars; to Tynsid township 100 dollars; to Vineland township 100 dollars. All of said appropriations to be expended as prayed for in the different petitions.

The application of M. B. Hayes for a cancellation of his personal assessment was granted.

Application of John Walter of Red Lake Falls, for a reduction of certain real estate assessment was rejected.

Two thousand dollars insurance on the court house was authorized in the Phenix Insurance Company.

A communication from the supervisors of Sanders township was read, in which they endorse the action of the board in cancelling personal taxes against certain parties in said township.

The county surveyor was employed to re-establish certain section corners and meander posts in Higdem and Esther townships.

The county attorney was instructed to commence action against the city of Crookston and town of Woodside for the amounts due the county for hospital fees.

The following resolution was offered by Oppegaard:

"Whereas, it appears from the computation by the State Printing Expert of certain commissioners proceeding reports, that the Crookston Times, the official paper of Polk county, has overcharged the county in printing by way of an excessive number of folios; therefore, be it Resolved, that the chairman of this board appoint a committee to go through the printing bills for this and last year and ascertain and compute the actual number of folios printed and legally to be charged for, and if found to be overcharged, to report at next meeting of this board the results of their investigation."

Kirsch moved, Demers seconded, that the resolution be laid on the table. In favor of the motion voted Demers, Kirsch and Rhinehart; in the negative, Oppegaard and Lindem. The chair declared the motion carried.

Lindem moved and Demers seconded that the chairman appoint a committee who was to be charged with the duty hereafter to measure and compute the number of folios contained in any official publication, the pay for which the county is liable. The chair thereupon appointed the committee on bills, of which Kirsch and Lindem as members of said committee, asked to be excused to serve in that apacity.

Township of Bygland was ordered reimbursed the amount of 5 dollars for merchandise advanced for the county.

The road and bridge committee reported and recommended that an amount of 100 dollars be and the same is hereby appropriated out of the road and bridge fund in favor of Huntsville township; towards repairing the bridge near Mallory, money available on the completion of the work, less the amount of 50 dollars, which said township of Huntsville owes the county on previous work.

Kirsch moved and Demers seconded that an item of $84.48 in a former bill of W. E. McKenzie, not previously considered by the board, be allowed. Motion carried against, Oppegaard voting in the negative.

The county auditor was authorized to advertise for bids on the grading of 6th street, between Ash and Broadway.

It was moved and seconded to instruct the county auditor to advertise for bids for the sale of 15,000 dollars Polk county bonds, to be issued in defraying the cost of constructing a certain ditch in Lowell township, known as ditch No. 1. Motion carried with four members voting in favor thereof, while Kirsch voted against the issuance of any bonds, on the grounds that the contracts were let to the highest bidder instead of the lowest, and that litigation was expected as a result there-

HIGH PRAISE.

An Interested Spectator Thought She Was a Genius.

It was Saturday night, and the outgoing "theater train" was crowded. A man with a light brown overcoat on his arm and wearing a crush hat rose and gave his seat to a self possessed young woman with gold rimmed eyeglasses, and stood patiently in the aisle, cheered somewhat by the reflection that she had thanked him.

In one of the side seats a short distance away sat an old man absorbed in a newspaper. His hat was off, and as the car was warm he had removed his coat. With his bald head, long and straggling beard, old fashioned spectacles, homemade shirt and backtownship appearance generally he was a striking figure, and it was not long until he attracted the attention of the young woman with the gold rimmed eyeglasses.

Drawing from some hiding place known only to herself a small blank book and a lead pencil, she began to make a sketch of him. Little by little it grew under her skillful fingers, notwithstanding the motion of the car, into a striking likeness. She was no beginner—this young person. She was an artist, and portraiture evidently was one of her specialties. The sketch attracted the notice of the man who had given her his seat.

"I beg your pardon," he said, stooping to look at it, "but I am something of a judge of such work as that, and if you will permit a total stranger to express his appreciation of your drawing I should like to say that it is wonderfully lifelike and artistic."

"Do you think so?" she replied.

"I do. You have caught his expression exactly. The fringe of hair round his head, his long whiskers, his prominent nose, his antiquated glasses, the intense earnestness with which he is reading his paper and his utter unconsciousness that he can possibly be an object of interest or curiosity to anybody are all reproduced with startling fidelity. Don't let me interrupt you in your drawing. It isn't every day you have the opportunity to make a study of a subject so original, I dare say?"

"No, indeed."

"And you do well to improve it. He is altogether unique. He looks as if this might be the first time in all his life that he has ever visited a city. Probably it is. That was an admirable touch. With two or three deft strokes you have made it ten times more laughable, and yet you have hardly exaggerated any feature. That is where true talent for caricature comes in."

"Ah, now, you are flattering me."

"Not at all. I may claim, without boasting, to be a capable critic of work like yours, and in this case I am unusually well qualified to judge. The old gentleman"—

"Oh, do you know him?"

"Yes, I know him very well. He happens to be my father."—Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Meek—No, it's not that. But Mr. Welloff, who lives next door to us, gives his wife a new dress or hat almost every week.—Detroit Tribune.

Revised.

The small boy had been singing that sadly slangful song, "One of His Legs Is Longer Than It Really Ought to Be" in the presence of a young woman from Boston.

"Dear me!" she exclaimed. "It must be very interesting. I should like very much to see him."

"To see whom?" asked her aunt.

BROKEN OFF.

How Puppkins and His True Love Were Torn Asunder.

"You may as well take back your congratulations, old man, for the engagement is broken off," said Puppkins yesterday over in a corner at the Platypus club.

"Broken off!" exclaimed his friend Noodles, astonished.

"Fact, I assure you. It is destined that I am to remain a bachelor, for the present, at all events. The idea has its consolations, but I could have wished to withdraw from the threshold of matrimony somewhat more gracefully, perhaps."

"Miss Gid"—

"Giddings is her name. She has given me the cold shake, my dear fellow."

"Has a rival"—

"No. It was no rival, so far as I am aware. There was no romance in the business. It was just plain, ordinary squash pie."

"Squash pie!" echoed Noodles. "How—what can pie, particularly squash pie, have to do with a love affair?"

"Much, in this instance," said Puppkins, with increased gloom. "It squashed me."

"Pray explain."

"Well," began Puppkins, settling back in his chair and lighting a cigar, "I'll tell you all about it. There is a little coterie of New England men in Baltimore which calls itself the 'Pilgrim Fathers.' I am—or rather was—a member of it, being, as you know, from Massachusetts. It dines once a month on corned beef and cabbage, baked beans and squash pie. Other edibles are furnished, but nothing that is not distinctly a Yankee dish."

"I see," said Noodles.

"I am, or rather was, a member of this exclusive organization. The last dinner was just 10 days ago. I went to it after passing the afternoon with Flora—that is to say, Miss Giddings, who is spending the winter in Baltimore. With the repast several kinds of wine were served as usual—the pilgrims not limiting themselves to New England vintages—and it is possible that I may have taken a trifle too much. There is no doubt whatever that the man who sat directly opposite me at the table—his name is Perkins—became offensively intoxicated."

"Perkins?" said Noodles. "Philadelphia man, isn't he?"

"No. He is from Connecticut. That is why he was invited, being supposed to be a connoisseur in pies."

"Oh, of course!"

"Well," continued Puppkins, "to make a long story short, Perkins and I came to words. He insulted me—I don't exactly remember how—and I threw a glass of wine across the table into his face. He responded by picking up two large and very thick squash pies, which happened to be conveniently within reach, and letting me have them where he thought they would do the most good. I have since learned that Perkins is pitcher in an amateur baseball nine of some local celebrity."

"The deuce!"

"One of the pies—I believe I said they were very large and thick—hit me square in the face, while the other struck me flat in the middle of my dress shirt—that is to say, I ascertained these facts after a bit, being so totally blinded by the first missile that I did not at once understand what had happened. After my face had been washed with the contents of a finger bowl and wiped with napkins, I was able to give some assistance to two or three of the fellows, who started in to scrape me off with table knives."

"And Perkins?"

"Oh, he had vanished in the confusion. But why proceed with the painful details? You know what happens when a soft body, acting as a projectile and moving at a high rate of speed, strikes a hard obstacle. It scatters. That is what happened to those pies, for which I served as a target. There was not a square inch of my person in front that was not covered with semiliquid squash. My hair was full of it. My pockets were found to contain considerable quantities of it. Some of it made its way down my neck, and I eventually discovered a small portion of it in each of my shoes."

"Horrible! But what has all this got to do with the breaking of your engagement?"

"Everything. I was expelled from the 'Pilgrim Fathers' on the ground that I had been the aggressor in the squash pie episode, having thrown wine in Perkins' face. Miss Giddings learned this, receiving also a full and highly humorous account of the affair. She wrote me that she could never marry a man who was capable of figuring in so ridiculous and discreditable a performance, returning at the same time my letters and ring. The latter is a consolation because it is worth a hundred dollars, and I am particulary hard up just at present."—Washington Star.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifteen and 75-100 dollars the interest which became due on the first day of December A. D. 1893 which is claimed to be due and is due and unpaid at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John A. Lundbeck and Hendricka J. Lundbeck his wife, mortgagors, to J. E. Luce, mortgagee, bearing date the first day of June A. D. 1893, and duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the first day of June A. D. 1893, at 1 o'clock p. m., in book 50 of mortgages, on page 574 thereof, which said mortgage was executed to secure that certain promissory note for three hundred and fifty dollars, dated June 1st 1893 with interest annually from date thereof at 9 per cent, and due June 1st 1898, and signed by said mortgagors as makers and delivered and payable to the order of said mortgagee and the said mortgagee by reason of the said default in the payment of said interest has elected and hereby elects to use his option as provided in said mortgage and he hereby declares that the whole sum of money which is secured by said mortgage is now due and payable and there is claimed to be due and payable and unpaid at the date of this notice upon said mortgage the sum of three hundred and seventy-three and 75-100 dollars, principal and interest; and no action or proceedings at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage viz:

The South one half (S ½) of the North west quarter [NW ¼] and lots three [3] and four [4] of Section numbered three [3] in Township numbered one hundred and fifty-two [152] of Range numbered forty-four [44] containing one hundred and sixty acres according to the government survey thereof in Polk county and state of Minnesota with hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt interest and taxes if any on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston in said county and state on Saturday the 7th day of June A. D. 1894 at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

A Versatile Artist.

They were speaking of an artist who made a specialty of animals and was eminently successful at it in a financial way.

"Do you like this work?" asked the young woman.

"Yes. But I should like to see him try other subjects occasionally."

The commercial instinct mastered the artistic in the man on the instant.

"Certainly," he responded. "He can draw a check that is simply superb."—Detroit Free Press.

"When they resurveyed the line between North Carolina and Virginia," says a recently returned commercial traveler, "the engineers found an error in the old standards and in one place moved the line a short distance south.

"'Laws, massh, chile, what's you a-doin?' said an old colored woman as she observed the men moving one of the monuments which for years had stood near her cabin.

"'Don't you know you mustn't [illegible] that ere stone that shows as how I li[illegible] Norf Carolinny?'

"'But you don't live in North Carolina any longer, aunty,' replied one of the [illegible]. 'The new survey shows that you li[illegible] Virginia now.'

"'Anyhow,' she remarked at length, [illegible] glad I'se livin' in Virginny [illegible] said round here as how Virginny [illegible] healthy like than Norf Carolinny.'—New York Herald.

Why He Was Delayed.

A newsboy by his [illegible] attracted the attention of a tender hearted young woman at the crossing at the city hall and The Citizen office the other evening. In response to solicitous inquiry the lad told her the same moss covered story about being "stuck" with a score of evening papers and seemingly afraid to make a venture toward home. Out came the lady's pocketbook, and the price of his papers was readily handed the boy in his dirty hands.

"Now, my dear boy, you can go home and get your supper," remarked the kind lady.

"Naw, I can't," answered the little chap with reckless candor; "I've got ter wait fer me brudder. He's workin de same racket."

Away went the little rascal around the corner to share his gift with his pal.—Brooklyn Citizen.

His Conclusion.

An Alleghany household was discussing George Washington when that patriot's birthday came around, and the small boy of the family asked:

"Who was George Washington?"

"He was a man who never told a lie," replied the mamma impressively.

After a period of silent wonder the questioner asked:

"Couldn't he talk?"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Pugilist Actor.

"I tell you," said the young man with inky fingers, "there's a great future for dramatic genius now."

"Do you think so?"

"Yes, and I am going right to work and get a first mortgage on the new deal."

"How?"

"I am going to rewrite Shakespeare and work a slugging match into every one of his plays."—Washington Star.

A Sinecure.

Harry Newedd drew his young wife to his bosom. His face was radiant with joy.

"I was successful, my darling," he said. "I secured the clerkship I applied for on the board for securing immediate rapid transit facilities."

A sweet smile of serene happiness wreathed her dainty lips. She knew then their future was assured. He had secured a position for life!—Puck.

A COLORADO DIANA

A Modest Little Woman Who Finds Amusement in Shooting Lions.

"I met a lady in Colorado recently," said E. H. Kellogg of Kansas City, to a St. Louis reporter, "who has killed several wild beasts, including eight or ten mountain lions. I had heard of her repeatedly and having occasion to transact some business with her husband I expected, when he invited me with him in his little isolated house, to find it presided over by a lady of Amazonian type, who would be much more manly than ladylike in her habits. To my surprise, I found her but little more than 5 feet high and just as pleasant and full of attractive womanly ways as the best society belle.

"After supper I told her in a joking way I didn't believe she would dare face a mountain lion, to which she said if I would get up at 5 o'clock in the morning she would convince me. I accepted the challenge and before it was light we were climbing up an adjoining hill covered with timber of every description.

"Just as it was getting light we came across a horrible-looking animal, which frightened me to death. I turned to run, shouting to her to follow. Her only answer was a laugh, followed by the crack of her repeating rifle. I swung round at once and saw her taking deliberate aim at the animal, which she had disabled with her first shot and which was making the most abominable noises that could be imagined.

"On the way back to breakfast she promised faithfully not to give me away, but when I was boasting at breakfast of how I had helped beat up the lion and had begged her to let me shoot it for her, she forgot her promise and let me up to ridicule and contempt in the most unsportsmanlike manner."

FOOLED BY THE BRIDEGROOM

A Best Man Whose Joke Was Foreseen and Accordingly Failed Miserably.

At a noon wedding at the bride's home out in a New Jersey suburb one day last week, says the New York Sun, the bridegroom accidentally dropped the information to his best man that he intended to take his bride that evening to the theater, in New York, before assuming the bridal journey the next day. There was considerable talk about the various play in town, and the best man, with the consideration that usually prevails on such occasions offered to procure seats that afternoon for any performance that the bridegroom might prefer. The bridegroom said he had obtained his seats.

"I trust they are good ones," said the best man, and the bridegroom said they were, for he had selected them himself.

"Of course, they're not in a box," said the best man, "for that would be too conspicuous, and I know you wouldn't care to advertise your wedding in any such manner."

"You bet your life, old man," said the bridegroom, with the ease and familiarity that befits a happy man on such an occasion, "they are not in a box. They are right in the center of the orchestra seats," and to make a show that narrowness had taken no part in the day's events, as most bridegrooms do, he gave the numbers and row letter of the seats. He wasn't flustered a bit, and this memory of details showed it.

With a wicked gleam in his eyes the best man turned away, and after much whispering it was noticed that he took the next convenient train to town on the plea that he had some urgent business that must be looked after before the office closed. His urgent business showed itself when the patrons of a well known uptown theater arrived for the performance. They were astonished to see two seats in the center of the house elaborately decorated with white ribbon, smilax, roses and other flowers; and every man and woman took in the situation at once. There was such craning of necks as seldom is seen in a theater, as each arrival came down the center isle. That house was in good humor long before the curtain went up. The young women especially seemed beside themselves with interest. Would they never come, and how would they act? A sedate and portly couple of middle age passed into the row, and there was a sigh of disappointment as they hovered about the seats for a time, but they finally settled down next to the decorated places. Two men occupied seats on the other side of these chairs. Except these two seats, the whole row was filled when the performance began.

Two minutes passed and there was a commotion. A young man in evening dress, accompanied by a budding, smiling young woman in a tailor-made gown, swept down the aisle, and the usher showed the way. The young man drew back at the entrance to the row to allow the young woman to pass in. She got by two men before her eyes lighted on the seats. With an expression of horror and a little scream she drew back, and then fairly rushed back into the aisle. The house was wild with merriment and the young couple retreated up the aisle and out of doors. Throughout the evening the two seats remained vacant. There was one young man a few rows back, however, who had sat as if awaiting the arrival of people to fill the bridal seats but who didn't laugh. He was the best man. He remained through the performance to wait for further developments, and at the close he was amazed to see the bridal couple of the afternoon, who had sat in the balcony unperceived by him, walking out calmly with the other auditors and both smiling. The bridegroom touched the best man on the shoulder and said:

"Say, Billy, you didn't suppose I was fool enough to give you the right numbers to our seats, did you?"

HISTORY MADE BY LUCK.

Many Notable Events Have Occurred Because of Trivial Happenings.

Dr. Lafferty, of New Orleans, recently delivered a lecture on "Lee's Lack of Luck," says the Times-Democrat. The doctor told how two English snobs, at a restaurant in Paris, by their sneers drove Murat out of service as a waiter and through this accident Murat became a marshal of France and King of Naples. Samples of lucky accidents were numerous in ancient and modern history and there were also many examples that went to show how many of the ancients believed in good luck or good fortune. Napoleon had lost Waterloo through the mere accident of bringing on an attack of sick headache through eating onion and lateh against the advice of his physician.

In 1896 a quarrel between Conkling and Blaine decided the presidency of the United States many years afterward, when Blaine ran against Cleveland.

Abraham Lincoln, after being a member of congress, desired to secure a clerkship in Washington, but he was defeated by Justin Butterfield. He was disappointed, but had he not been defeated he would have spent his life in obscurity instead of becoming president of the United States.

Oliver Cromwell was once on board a ship bound for America, but he was taken back by a constable, and the result was that he became one of the greatest men England ever knew.

Ulysses Grant would not have been a military man had it not been that his rival for a West Point cadetship had been found to have six toes on each foot instead of five.

The great silver mine, the "Silver King," had been discovered by the lucky accident of a prospector throwing a piece of rock at a lazy mule.

THEY ARE THE CAUSE OF VERY MANY DEATHS.

The Enormous Hamadryas and Its Peculiarities—Curious Superstition of the Natives—Struggles of the Government With the Serpents.

Altogether about 20,000 persons die each year in India from the bites of the various snakes I have mentioned, and it is no exaggeration to say that some sixty who were alive and well yesterday, are to-day being burnt or buried out here as a sequel to these accidents. The same will happen to-morrow and the next day; and at least one death from similar causes may be expected to occur every half hour between now and the time the readers peruse what I have written. Mortality of this magnitude is a terrible thing, though the fact must be remembered that it is distributed among a population four times as large as that of the United States, and thus passes to a great extent unnoticed.

The casualties are confined almost entirely to the poorer and more ignorant natives, who habitually go about with bare feet, says McClure's Magazine. For, although creatures like the hamadryas and the echis are occasionally spoiling for a fight, as a general rule a snake is no more anxious to be trodden upon than a man is to tread upon it. The consequence is that people who wear boots are hardly ever bitten. This is not so much because of the protection of the leather as on account of the noise made by a boot upon the ground, which warns the snake to get out of the way. The ordinary native in bare feet makes hardly any sound whatever as he walks along, and is consequently very liable to surprise a snake in the path. The white man, on the other hand, in a good pair of creaky boots, is so safe that it is most exceptional to hear of an accident where he is concerned.

The British government does what it can to get rid of poisonous snakes. Large rewards are annually paid for their heads, and in this way great numbers are destroyed. Attempts are constantly being made to clear away the rubbish which accumulates around village sites, and thus to reduce the shelter in which these creatures breed. As yet, however, hardly any appreciable effect has been produced. Year after year the tale of death remains undiminished, and fresh snakes appear as fast as their predecessors are killed off. For a long time the supposition was widely entertained that the professional native snake killers regularly bred the creatures for the sake of the reward; but, as scientific men have quite failed in their efforts to persuade poisonous snakes to multiply in confinement, the belief seems scarcely reasonable.

A curious superstition is said to prevail in some localities to the effect that an innocent maiden is not liable to be bitten, and when a death occurs from the bite of some snake which has been encouraged in the house, it is said to be the little daughter of the family who is most often selected for the dangerous task of driving it tenderly away. Even when this is not the case, the greatest care is usually taken that no harm shall happen to the snake.

Dried and pulverized, the poison is almost as deadly as when injected by the live cobra. Native doctors use it medicinally in microscopic doses, and have a barbarous method of extracting it. They put a cobra into an earthen pot, and drop a banana in after it. They then tie down the lid and heat the pot over the fire. The wretched snake is soon tortured into a rage in its baking prison, and bites the banana in its paroxysms. The fruit is afterward carefully dried and is then ready for use. It is pronounced under some circumstances to be a wonderfully powerful stimulant, but it is only used in extreme cases, and even then probably does infinitely more harm than good.

The same preparation is also said to be employed by leather workers for poisoning other people's cattle, with a view to afterward buying up the hides cheap. This is a form of crime very prevalent in India and one that the authorities find most difficult to check. For how is the ignorant native cultivator to prove that his plow bullocks have not died of cattle disease? He may complain to the nearest magistrate, and the magistrate may order the beasts to be examined, but snake poison leaves no external marks, and is almost impossible to detect chemically. It is not surprising, under these circumstances, that he often decides to accept the loss, and not incur the enmity of the cattle poisoners by seeking redress.

A monarch among poisonous snakes is the enormous hamadryas, which grows to be as much as fourteen feet in length, and is so fierce that it will sometimes attack and even chase anyone who ventures near to its nest. Native snake charmers, who will handle the fiercest cobras fearlessly, are usually loath to touch a hamadryas, though I have occasionally seen a large specimen of this venomous reptile in their bags. It lays its eggs in a heap of decayed leaves, which it collects for the purpose, and sits upon the top to keep off intruders. A road through the jungle will sometimes be closed against all comers by a pair of these snakes, and woe betide the unfortunate traveler who stumbles unawares upon the nest.

The hamadryas feeds largely upon other snakes, but it is fortunately somewhat rare. Curiously enough, it is not always aggressive. Indeed, it sometimes happens that it is quite unwilling to strike. Superficially it is not unlike a harmless rock snake, and not very long ago, in Burmah, a man brought one from the jungle and kept it loose in his house for some days under the impression that it was one of these creatures. During the whole of its captivity it never attempted to bite any one, and its captor, who had been familiarly pulling it about by the tail, was only apprised of his mistake by a forest officer who happened to turn up and who knew a good deal about snakes. It is easy to imagine the haste with which the amateur snake charmer proceeded to dispose of his captive.

Facts About the Supreme Court.

There have been fifty-nine judges of the supreme court of the United States since its establishment in 1789. There have been eight chief justices—Jay of New York, Rutledge of South Carolina, Elsworth of Connecticut, Marshall of Virginia, and Taney of Maryland, before the close of the civil war (all eastern men), and Chase of Ohio, Waite of Ohio, and Fuller of Illinois (all western men), since. All the early chief justices came from seaboard states. Massachusetts, which has enjoyed other civic honors under the government, has never had a chief justice of the United States supreme court. Two judges served thirty-four years each, Marshall of Virginia and Story of Massachusetts. Delaware and Vermont of the original states and Indiana of the new states never had a judge in this court. Louisiana never had a judge until President Cleveland appointed Senator White. New York has had a judge on the bench since 1845, but has one no longer Mr. Cleveland having appointed a Louisiana man to the vacancy on the New York circuit.—New York Sun.

A MAN WITH A HISTORY.

THE TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE THAT BEFELL JOHN W. THOMAS OF THETA, TENNESSEE.

Afflicted With a Peculiar Disease. His Body Covered With Lumps. Could Not Eat and Thought He Was Going to Dry Up. His Recovery the Marvel of Tennessee.

(From the Nashville, Tenn., Banner.)

Mr. John W. Thomas, Jr., of Theta, Tenn., is a man with a most interesting history. At present he is interested in blooded horses, for which Maury county is famous.

"Few people, I take it," said Mr. Thomas to a reporter who had asked him for the story of his life, "have passed through as remarkable a chain of events as I have and remained alive to tell the story.

"It was along in 1884, when I was working in the silver mines in New Mexico, that my troubles began; at first I suffered with indigestion, and so acute did the pains become that I went to California for my health, but the trip did me little good, and fully impressed with the idea that my last day had nearly dawned upon me, I hurried back here to my old home to die.

"From simple indigestion my malady developed into a chronic inability to take any substantial food, I was barely able to creep about, and at times I was prostrated by spells of heart palpitation. This condition continued until one year ago.

"On the 11th of April, 1893, I suddenly collapsed, and for days I was unconscious; in fact, I was not fully myself until July. My condition on September 1st was simply horrible. I weighed but seventy pounds, whereas my normal weight is 165 pounds. All over my body there were lumps from the size of a grape to the size of a walnut; my fingers were cramped so that I could not more than half straighten them. I had entirely lost control of my lower limbs, and my hand trembled so that I could not drink without spilling the liquid. Nothing would remain on my stomach, and it seemed that I must dry up before many more days had passed.

"I made another round of the physicians, calling in one after the other, and by the aid of morphine and other medicines they gave me I managed to live though barely through the fall."

Here Mr. Thomas displayed his arms, and just above the elbow of each there was a large irregular stain as large as the palm of the hand and of a purple color, the space covered by the mark was sunken nearly to the bone.

"That," said Mr. Thomas, "is what the doctors did by putting morphine into me.

"On the 11th of December, 1893, just eight months after I took permanently to bed—I shall never forget the date—my cousin Joe Foster of Carter's Creek, called on me and gave me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, saying they had cured him of partial paralysis, with which I knew he had all but died. I followed his directions and began taking the medicine. As a result I stand before you to-day the most surprised man on earth. Look at my hand; it is as steady as yours; my face has a healthy look about it; I have been attending to my duties for a month. Since I began taking the pills I have gained 30 pounds, and I am still gaining. All the knots have disappeared from my body except this little kernel here in my palm. I have a good appetite and I am almost as strong as I ever was.

"Yesterday I rode thirty-seven miles on horseback; I feel tired to-day but not sick. I used to have from two to four spells of heart palpitation every night. Since I began the use of the pills I have had but four spells altogether.

"I know positively that I was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I believe firmly that it is the most wonderful remedy in existence to-day, and every fact I have presented to you is known to my neighbors as well as myself, and they will certify to the truth of my remarkable cure."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are not a patent medicine in the sense that name implies. They were first compounded as a prescription and used as such in general practice by an eminent physician. So great was their efficacy that it was deemed wise to place them within the reach of all. They are now manufactured by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred, and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company.

FIGHTING POWER OF CHINA.

About a Million Men in the Army Now and Many More Available.

The fighting power of Chinese militia when armed with modern weapons is evidenced, says the Nineteenth Century, by the frequent repulses and defeats which the French suffered during the campaign in Tonquin, the last being that of Gen. Negrier, near Lang-Son, nine days before the Franco-Chinese treaty of peace was signed, and when the French army of occupation in Tonquin had been raised to 40,000 men. These Chinese troops were merely levies from Yunnan, Kuang-tung, and Kuang-si, and not part of the 170,000 who had been trained by European officers in Northern China. The total army of China at the time, including 600,000 militia, known as the Green Flag army, scattered throughout the various provinces, was said to be about 1,000,000 men. In times of necessity this force could be largely increased. The following quotation from an author who had experience with Gen. Gordon's "ever victorious army" shows Chinamen are admirably suitable for soldiers:

"The old notion is pretty well got rid of that they are at all a cowardly people when properly paid and efficiently led; while the regularity and order of their habits, which dispose them to peace in ordinary times, give place to a daring bordering upon recklessness in time of war. Their intelligence and capacity for remembering facts make them well fitted for use in modern warfare, as does also the coolness and calmness of their disposition. Physically they are, on the average, not so strong as Europeans, but considerably more so than most of the other races of the East, and on a cheap diet of rice, vegetables, salt fish and pork they can go through a vast amount of fatigue, whether in a temperate climate or a tropical one, where Europeans are ill-fitted for exertion. Their wants are few; they have no caste prejudices, and hardly any appetite for intoxicating liquors."

Installments.

"Tell me all," he urged.

"Not now," she answered, shyly.

"You can begin," he suggested, "and claim the floor again to-morrow."

He cited the United States senate by way of precedent.

HAS A COLLECTION OF TOWELS.

A New York Advertising Man's Unique Stock, Collected in Many Cities.

Of all the queer, unexplainable hobbies for a man to possess Benjamin F. Davenport, a New York advertising man, has one which outranks that of every competitor. Davenport is a collector, not of historical relics or postage stamps or walking sticks or pipes or rare china, but of towels, and hotel towels at that. He has been at it a dozen years and he has a collection which represents a principal hotel in every city in the United States and Mexico. Some of the towels are linen and some are cotton and many are ragged. They vary in size from a napkin to a table cloth. The smallest one comes from a hotel in Vermont, where the guests go to the pump on frosty mornings and fill their own pitchers, and the largest—a Turkish towel—is from a Minneapolis palace. It would do at a pinch for a bathrobe. The most ragged bit was the property of a Memphis hostelry. It would make a good necklace, because there is nothing left to it but the selvedge. Davenport has his collection carefully ticketed, and on each tab are a few words, which are reminders of some particular incident connected with the hotel or town, or with the obtaining of the towel itself.

"I get the best way I can," explained the man with the outlandish hobby to a writer for the Mail and Express, "and I don't mind telling you that at least 25 per cent of my collection has been secured without asking anybody's permission. The intrinsic value is so small that it isn't worth while. If a towel appears to be an expensive one I always speak to the landlord about it and pay him, if necessary. I have towels from Key West up to Manitoba; from Portland, Me., to San Diego, Cal., and from every hotel which has a history. I do this for my own amusement and because I don't believe it has ever been done before by any man in the world. Anybody can and most persons do collect umbrellas or buttons or newspapers, but who ever heard of a towel collector before? I tell you, my boy, there's nothing like being unique, even if a hotel-keeper gets after you occasionally with a club."

Knew Where he Came From.

An important question in theology was settled the other day by two little boys of this city, one aged four and the other five years.

Little four-year old said to the other: "Where did that little baby come from that is at your house, Robbie Stephen?"

The answer was: "He came from Heaven, and you came from Heaven too, Willie Hendersan."

The reply came back as quick as a flash: "No, I din't; I came from Scotland."—Omaha Bee.

NOTED TEMPERANCE LEADER
The Forcible and Brilliant David Frost.

He Endorses Indian Sagwa.

The portrait of David Frost, the noted temperance lecturer, will be recognized far and wide.

DAVID FROST, BOSTON, MASS.

In a recent conversation with Mr. Frost, that gentleman said, with the convincing earnestness which characterizes his remarks: "One of the greatest evils with which the friends of temperance have to contend is the cheap whiskey decoctions and miserable rum mixtures by which the market is flooded under the guise of 'Bitters,' 'Sarsaparillas,' 'Gingers,' and other patent medicines.

"I do not mean to say," continued Mr. Frost, "that all proprietary medicines come under this head, and in fact I know from personal experience of one which is not only a Great Medicine, a splendid Tonic, and Unrivalled Blood Purifier, but which is innocent of all deteriorating ingredients and Free from Harmful Effects, no matter how much or how freely it may be used. It is not my wish to appear as the exponent of any public remedy, but in this case I deem it my duty to commend that Grand Remedy of the Indian race, 'Kickapoo Indian Sagwa.'

"I speak from experience, for it has stood me in good stead. When half sick, worn out, and my most rebellious stomach refused to longer act in its normal capacity, 'Kickapoo Indian Sagwa' has restored me to a healthy condition when nothing else would. I have taken occasion also to learn something about this medicine and its origin, and know that 'Sagwa' is not only an old and tried remedy among the Indians, but that its Vegetable Purity and Harmless Curative Effects are still maintained, and that its manufacture is still carried on by modern methods exactly in accordance with the ways of the noble Red Man.

"Simple Roots, Barks, Leaves and Flowers from the Forest are all that enter into its composition, and the Strength which is gained from its use is not the false strength of the rum bottle but the Noble Exhilaration of Bounding Health, and the Purified Blood, cleansed of its poison, coursing through every Vein and Artery of the Human System."

Words fail to convey the earnest force of his remarks as expressed to the writer and the high regard he had for the remedy.

The subject of the above portrait is the Rev. Chas. Prosser, a much beloved and most devout minister of the gospel at Mount Carmel, Northumberland Co., Pa. Mr. Prosser's usefulness, was, for a long time, greatly impaired by a distressing, obstinate disease. How his malady was finally conquered we will let him tell in his own language. He says: "I was a great sufferer from dyspepsia, and I had suffered so long that I was a wreck; life was rendered undesirable and it seemed death was near; but I came in contact with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and his 'Pleasant Pellets.' I took twelve bottles of 'Discovery,' and several bottles of the 'Pellets,' and followed the hygenic advice of Dr. Pierce, and I am happy to say it was indeed a cure, for life is worth living now."

For dyspepsia, or indigestion, "liver complaint," or torpid liver, biliousness, constipation, chronic diarrhea and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels, Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery effects perfect cures when all other medicines fail. It has a specific tonic effect upon the lining membranes of the stomach and bowels. As an invigorating, restorative tonic it gives strength to the whole system and builds up solid flesh to the healthy standard, when reduced by "wasting diseases."

Mr. J. F. Hudson, a prominent lawyer of Whitcherville, Sebastian Co., Ark., writes: "Having suffered severely, for a long time, from a torpid liver, indigestion, constipation, nervousness and general debility, and finding no relief in my efforts to regain my health, I was induced to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets.' Under this treatment, I improved very much and in a few months was able to attend to my professional duties."

Yours truly,

J. F. Hudson

To purify, enrich and vitalize the blood, and thereby invigorate the liver and digestive organs, brace up the nerves, and put the system in order generally; also to build up both solid flesh and strength after grip, pneumonia, fevers and other prostrating diseases, "Golden Medical Discovery" has no equal. It does not make fat people more corpulent, but builds up solid, wholesome flesh.

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, have fullness or bloating after eating, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, frequent headaches, "floating specks" before eyes, nervous prostration and drowsiness after meals!

If you have any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from torpid liver, associated with dyspepsia, or indigestion. The more complicated your disease the greater the number of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it.

Nervousness, sleeplessness, nervous prostration, nervous debility, and kindred disturbances are generally due to impoverished blood. The nervous system suffers for want of pure, rich blood to nourish and sustain it. Purify, enrich and vitalize the blood by taking "Golden Medical Discovery" and all these nervous troubles vanish.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is far better for this purpose than the much advertised nervines and other compounds, so loudly recommended for nervous prostration, as they "put the nerves to sleep," but do not invigorate, brace up and so strengthen the nervous system as does the "Discovery," thus giving permanent benefit and a radical cure.

Buy of reliable dealers. With any others, something else that pays them better will probably be urged as "just as good." Perhaps it is, for them; but it can't be, for you.

A Book (136 pages) treating of the foregoing diseases and pointing out successful means of home cure, also containing vast numbers of testimonials, (with phototype portraits of writers), references and other valuable information, will be sent on receipt of six cents, to pay postage. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE BRIBERY CHARGE

BEING INVESTIGATED BY A COMMITTEE.

Senators Kyle and Hunton Testify That C. W. Buttz Offered Them Money to Vote Against the Tariff Bill—Buttz Called as a Witness.

Washington, May 22.—The committee to investigate the charges of bribery in the senate were on hand promptly today in the room of the committee on privileges and elections. Senator Hunton was at the meeting as a witness.

C. W. Buttz with his attorney was without the doors of the committee room, and there were other expected witnesses in the corridors. Mr. Buttz made a written application to be present. The committee sat in secret session until 10.30 when Mr. Hunton was summoned to testify. Senator Hunton remained with the committee about half an hour, and after he emerged from the committee room the son, Epha Hunton, Jr., was called in and asked to state what he knew about the alleged effort to bribe his father. Both Senator Hunton and his son stated that C. W. Buttz was the man who had approached Senator Hunton. The narrative did not differ materially from the story heretofore given to the press by Senator Hunton.

Senator Kyle was before the committee for more than an hour and was informed that he would probably be called again. He put the committee in possession of all the information in his power, stating that he was first approached by Buttz about two months ago with the proposition to vote against the tariff bill and receive pay for his vote, the amount offered being $14,000. In reply to a question, Senator Kyle said he was confident Buttz represented other parties, and the proposition, if it had been accepted, would have been made good. Mr. Kyle also stated that Buttz intimated to him that if $14,000 was not enough he could have almost any sum he would name as high as $75,000.

Maj. Buttz was the principal witness during the afternoon. He was accompanied by his attorney, E. H. McGowan. Buttz was before the committee for about an hour and was excused with the request that he be in attendance again to-morrow. He explicitly denied any intention on his part to corrupt the senators. It is also understood that he politely declined to answer some of the more pertinent questions put to him by members of the committee.

Other witnesses of the session were Duncan McFarlane, Senator Kyle's clerk, and James W. Walker, an attorney of this city, who gave Buttz a letter to Epha Hunton, Jr. Mr. Walker stated that when Buttz had asked for a letter to Mr. Hunton he had said he wanted to employ him as attorney in a land case and had given no other reason for wanting to know the gentleman. Mr. McFarlane told how, after Senator Kyle had referred Buttz to him, he had talked with him and made notes upon his conversation. He confirmed Senator Kyle's statement and said explicitly that Buttz had made a direct proposition to bribe the senator to vote against the bill. He also submitted his notes on his conversation with Buttz.

Washington, May 23.—C. W. Buttz, who was very anxious yesterday to be represented before the senate bribery investigating committee, was not on hand when the committee met to-day. Instead he sent his attorney to explain that he was otherwise engaged and asked to be excused from attendance for the present. On being questioned by the committee as to Mr. Buttz's reason for his conduct Attorney McGowan stated that his client was engaged in making search for a witness who could corroborate his statements and throw light on the question at issue. The explanation was far from satisfactory, and Mr. McGowan was informed that Mr. Buttz was the man wanted, and not a substitute. Accordingly they called the sergeant-at-arms to their assistance, and directed that a subpoena be issued for Buttz. While waiting the committee called in several senators, including Messrs. Voorhees, Harris and Coke, to whom Senators Hunton and Kyle had stated they had given information of the approaches made to themselves soon after Buttz had first made his proposition to them. They confirmed the statements of Messrs. Hunton and Kyle. When asked if they knew of other attempts to bribe senators, Messrs. Voorhees, Harris and Coke said they did not.

The sergeant-at-arms reported to the committee that he had failed to find Mr. Buttz. He, however, had ascertained that Maj. Buttz had left the city on an early train with the expectation of returning by 2 o'clock, at which time he had stated he would again appear before the committee to continue his testimony. Both Buttz's attorney and his boarding house keeper assured the senate officials that he had stated that he was only going to a suburban town, the name of which he did not give, and that the purpose of his sudden departure was to find a man to corroborate his statement made before the committee yesterday.

Washington, May 24.—C. W. Buttz, who is accused of attempting to bribe senators to vote against the tariff bill, was before the investigating committee to-day. He gave the committee the name of E. E. Holman, a claim attorney in this city as one who could throw light upon the whole transaction so far as he (Buttz) was concerned. Mr. Holman was summoned. Holman's testimony furnishes the key to Buttz's explanation of his course in the whole transaction. When he emerged from the committee room, Mr. Holman said: "My mouth is sealed as to the proceedings in the committee room, but I can say to you that the story that I was the principal in the bribery affair is without foundation. It was through pure accident that I chanced to know anything of the business, and it came about through my happening to be in the office of Maj. Harris one day when Mr. Buttz came in. Harris was a lobbyist and talk drifted to the tariff. 'I think I know,' said Maj. Harris, 'where I could make $25,000 or $30,000 if I knew how the Populists would vote on the bill,' and, turning to Buttz, remarked to him: 'You are just the man to learn that fact, and I will give you $1,000 to find out for me.'"

Mr. Holman said that the man Harris, who had made this proposition to Buttz, had died on the 11th of last April, and that he was the only witness to the conversation between Harris and Buttz.

Maj. Buttz's testimony was devoted largely to an explanation of his absence from the city yesterday. He denied again that he made a direct proposition to bribe Senator Kyle.

Washington, May 25.—The senate bribery investigating committee yesterday began the inquiry into the connection of the sugar trust with the tariff legislation. E. J. Edwards, the author of the Holland letter in the Philadelphia Press, was before the committee for several hours.

It is known that Mr. Edwards presented a written memorandum, giving some of the sources of the information contained in his letter, and stating that he could not give his authority in other cases, and why he could not. He declined to state his authority for the information contained in his letter to the effect that Secretary Carlisle had appeared before the tariff subcommittee, consisting of Senators Jones, Vest and Mills, before the original senate bill was reported, and had insisted that sugar be given protection because of the party pledges made previous to the election, or for the statement that Mr. Carlisle had himself revised and written the sugar schedule. This schedule, as prepared by Mr. Carlisle, is still in existence, and might be obtained. The fact could be definitely obtained by summoning members of the finance committee.

Other statements in his letter, the authority for which Mr. Edwards declined to give, were those that $500,000 was the amount contributed by the sugar trust to the Democratic campaign fund in 1892, and that a member of the firm of Moore & Schley, who he said in his letters were Senator Brice's brokers, had been in possession of the latest amendments which had been agreed upon to the tariff bill before the time when Senator Voorhees still insisted upon the floor of the senate that no amendments had been agreed to.

He instanced in support of this information a statement made by Gov. Waller of Connecticut, before an investigating committee in that state, in which he said Gov. Waller had stated that wealthy men of New York had contributed $100,000 towards Democratic success in Connecticut. Mr. Edwards said it was his information that half of this amount had been contributed by Mr. Havemeyer, and that the other half had been raised by E. C. Benedict. In the case of Colorado, which had been stated in his letter had been carried for the Populists by the aid of the money thus obtained, he said that it was a notorious fact that leading members of the Democratic party in Colorado had been in consultation with the wealthy Democrats of New York prior to the election.

Mr. Edwards declined to give the name of his informant concerning Secretary Carlisle, and was given until to-morrow to consult his attorney and ascertain whether he can be compelled to answer the question.

The correspondent of a New York paper was requested to tell the name of his informant to the story that a meeting of sugar men and senators was held in Washington, at which the sugar schedule was agreed upon. He declined, and was given until to-morrow to consult his attorney.

The correspondent of a St. Louis paper declined to give his authority for the statement that the president had said that the Democratic party was under obligations to the sugar men.

Washington, May 26.—The report of the senate committee appointed to investigate the charges of attempts to bribe United States senators to vote against the tariff bill and the charges of improper influences being used in connection with the sugar schedule was submitted to the senate to-day, so far as concerns the attempted bribery of Senators Hunton and Kyle. The report after reciting the facts of Buttz's proffer of money to the son of Senator Hunton and to Senator Kyle says:

"Your committee are absolutely justified in stating that the facts have been established by the evidence, notwithstanding the denial on the part of Charles W. Buttz. There is no evidence to show the truth of Mr. Buttz's statement to Senator Kyle and Eppa Hunton, Jr., that a syndicate of bankers and capitalists had raised a sum of money to be used for the purpose of defeating the pending tariff bill, or that there was an agent of such a syndicate in Washington, and that any money was in Washington for that purpose. Buttz denies that he made any such statement, or that he had any knowledge of the existence of such a syndicate, or that he was the agent or representative of any one. He further denies that he has any money himself."

Judge Dittenhoefer, counsel for Correspondent Edwards, appeared before the sugar trust investigation to-day and announced that he had advised his client not to give the committee the names of persons from whom he received certain information bearing upon the subject under investigation. He quoted the supreme court decisions in the Kilbourne and Counselman cases in support of his position. Among other reasons Judge Dittenhoefer stated that for Mr. Edwards to disclose the names of his informants would be to degrade him as a newspaper man.

The committee overruled Judge Dittenhoefer's objections and again called Mr. Edwards in, repeated its demand that he give the names requested in the first instance, and received his final decision not to comply with the demand. He was then excused and the committee again went into secret session. No decision as to a future course of action was reached to-day.

Senator Caffery and ex-Congressman Lefevere of Louisiana were before the committee later in the day and absolutely denied the story of their participation in the alleged conference with the sugar trust people.

TOLD OF A TRAGEDY.

The Strange Story Found Floating in a Bottle.

Mount Vernon, Wash., May 26.—While several well known citizens were crossing the Skagit river in a canoe they found an old quinine bottle floating on some driftwood. It contained a paper with the following letter inside:

"Headwaters of South Fork, Cascade Creek, April 17, 1894.—I have been in the mountains for the past three weeks snow-bound, and have had nothing to eat for three days. It is impossible for me ever to get out alive. You will find me when the snow goes off. I am nearly wild. For God's sake try and save me. I have a wife in St. Paul. Her name is Mary Jacabow. In the name of God, what shall I do? Save me.

—"H. A. Jacabow."

The point designated is about 125 miles above this place, and the snow the past winter is supposed to have been twenty-five feet deep. Telegrams have been sent to parties at Sauk City, seventy-five miles up the river, to investigate the matter.

WORK OF CONGRESS

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, May 24.—In the senate today Mr. Teller moved to table the tariff bill. The motion was made to test the sense of the Democratic majority, and see if the bill was to be the bill which the Democratic party intended to pass. The motion was defeated by a strict party vote—28 to 38. Messrs. Hill, Irby and Kyle voted against Teller's motion.

Senator Gorman's speech was the feature of the day's session. Mr. Gorman and Mr. Brice have been cited by the opposition with the joint authorship of the compromise amendments which consolidated the Democratic side, and Mr. Gorman, especially, has been subjected to much criticism both in and out of the measure to the attacks that had been made upon him, explaining the necessity for the compromise and defining the theory upon which the modified bill, now before the senate was constructed, attracted intense interest. It was regarded as an exceedingly able exposition of the position of the conservatives. Mr. Gorman's speech furnished the texts for Republicans for the remainder of the day. His statement that a majority of the senate would support the bill was put to the test by Mr. Teller whose purpose was to "smoke out" any latent opposition on the Democratic side. Mr. Gorman's statement was justified by the vote, however, as the Colorado senator's motion to lay the tariff bill on the table was met by an unbroken Democratic front. Both Senator Hill of New York and Senator Irby, whose positions have been the subject of gossip from time to time, voted with their Democratic associates, as did the three Populists, including Mr. Peffer. The rates fixed today were as follows:

Railway bars, "T" rails, etc., 7-20 of a cent per pound; black taggers, between 10 and 20-wire gauge, .8, thinner than 25, .1 cent; iron and steel plates coated with zinc or other metals, except tin or terne plates, 1-4 cent more than rates in preceeding paragraph. Sheet iron or steel, polished, 1 3-4 cents per pound.

The house to-day defeated appropriations for a portion of the work of the civil service commission.

Washington, May 25.—In the senate today the Aldrich amendment to increase the duty on tin plate to 1 1-2 cents per pound was laid on the table 36 to 26. The Jones' tin plate amendment was then adopted, fixing the duty at 1 1-5 cents, as was also the Jones amendment grading the duty on steel ingots, blooms, etc., according to size, value, etc.

The surprise of the day was the acceptance by the finance committee of an amendment offered by Mr. Allen, the Nebraska Populist, to place barbed wire on the free list. Several Republicans opposed it, but did not carry their opposition to the extent of demanding a record-making vote upon it. Mr. Powers' amendment to include other classes of fence wire was defeated.

The following rates were adopted: Anchors, 1.2 cents per pound; axles, 1 1-2 cents; anvils, 1 3-4 cents; blacksmiths' tools, 1 1-2 cents; boiler tubes, 1 3-4 cents; bolts, 1 1-2 cents; cast iron pipe, .6 of a cent; cast iron vessels, stove plates, etc., .8 of a cent; mallable castings, .9 of a cent; cast hollow ware, 2 cents; chains, 30 per cent; cutlery, gradled according to value, and averaging about 25 per cent; shot guns and rifles, 30 per cent.

After clearing the table of some routine business the house considered the legislative appropriation bill. The Republicans were unsuccessful in their efforts to amend the pension paragraph so as to strike out the $200,000 appropriation for special investigation of alleged frauds. Mr. Alderson (Dem., W. Va.) tried to have struck out the provision for contingent expenses of the civil service commission, but was voted down. Mr. Stone (Dem., Ken.) offered an amendment striking out the provision for assistant attorneys to defend the government against war claims, and it was defeated. The Hayes anti-docking amendment was defeated—104 to 127. The amendment of Mr. Enlos (Dem., Tenn.) striking out the appropriation for the civil service commission was lost—80 to 158—amid Republican applause. The legislative bill was then passed.

Washington, May 26.—In the senate to-day the Aldrich resolution to substitute the McKinley tariff on shotguns for the 30 per cent ad valorem in the senate bill was laid on the table, as was also a motion to increase the rate to 45 per cent. The rate on shotguns, rifles and pistols was fixed at 30 per cent. Rates were then agreed to as follows: Table and carving knives and forks valued at more than $4 per dozen, and razor blades, scissors and shears, wholly, or partly finished, 45 per cent; all other table knives, forks, steels, etc., 35 per cent. Files, file blanks, rasps and floats of all cuts and kinds four inches in length and under, 30 cents per dozen; over four inches and under nine inches, 60 cents; over nine inches, $1. The house rate on engraved steel plates and railway fish plates (25 per cent ad valorem) were not changed. The rate on iron and steel rivets was increased from 25 to 30 per cent. The Jones amendments were agreed to fixing the rates on cross-cut saws at 6 cents per lineal foot; mill saws, 10 cents per foot; pit and drag saws, 8 cents; circular and other saws, 25 per cent. The rates on wood screws were fixed at 30 per cent, and umbrella ribs, made of iron or steel or other metal, 25 per cent. Paragraph 156, wheels, was passed over. The duty on crude aluminum was fixed at 10 cents per pound; on bronze powder or aluminum in the leaf, 40 per cent. The rates on gold and silver leaf were fixed at 30 per cent. The rate on metallic pens (except gold) was fixed at 8 cents; on pins, and hat, shawl and belt pins, commercially known as jewelry, 25 per cent. The chronometer, 10 per cent; watches and clocks, 25 per cent; manufactured articles (paragraph 177) not specially provided for in the bill, composed wholly or in part of metal, 30 per cent.

At the conclusion of the morning hour the house went into committee of the whole for the consideration of private bills.

Washington, May 28.—The senate took up the wood schedule to-day and may complete it in time to take up the sugar schedule to-morrow. Late Saturday the lead paragraph was taken up. During the course of the debate Senator Hill made a speech. The tariff bill, he said, had never met his views and did not now, but he was in favor of speedy action upon it. Mr. Hill in conclusion declared that he proposed to be consistent to himself in his advocacy of free raw material and he proposed to place those who were not on record. Mr. Vest in reply explained that the duty fixed was the rate of the Mills bill; that the question of a duty on lead ore was a question between the miners and the smelters representing the lead trust and that as between the two the committee had discriminated in favor of the miners. The vote on Hill's motion to place lead ores on the free list was defeated—ayes, 3; nayes, 52. Mills, Hill and Irby were the only affirmative votes. Murphy voted against Hill's motion.

This was District of Columbia day in the house.

PAINTED HIM RED.

Dr. Mitchell of St. Paul Park Gets an Unusual Coat.

St. Paul, May 28.—Dr. S. H. Mitchell of St. Paul Park was made the victim of an outrage Friday evening which has scandalized that little suburb. He was dragged from his hotel, badly kicked and beaten and covered with red paint and feathers by a gang of White Caps. He is in a precarious condition, three of his ribs being broken, and he may die from the effects of his injuries. Six of his assailants were arrested by Sheriff Marty of Washington county, but on a preliminary examination, five were released, and John Newberg, Sr., who was identified by Dr. Mitchell as one of his assailants, was held to the grand jury in $200 bonds. The others arrested, who were released, are John, Henry and Charles Newburg, sons of the man who were held, all under sixteen years of age; Aaron Newburg, his brother; John McCarthy, a brother-in-law, and Albert Fielding and Louis Moore. As usual in such cases there is said to be a woman in the case. Dr. Mitchell is a married man, but is separated from his wife, who, with her children, is living in St. Louis. It is alleged that Dr. Mitchell aroused the jealousy of Newburg, whose wife and Mitchell were said to be on very intimate terms.

SITE FOR A RESERVOIR.

Donated by Thomas Lowry to the City of Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, May 28.—No communication that has yet been presented to the council for months has attracted so much attention as that of Thomas Lowry offering to donate fifteen acres of valuable land to the city to be used as a water reservoir and filtering system. This handsome donation is made without stipulation other than the modest and reasonable one that the city shall render the grounds about the reservoir attractive and pleasant to the eye. The land in question is just off from Central avenue, and a mile above the city limits. City Engineer Cappelen, while surveying in Columbia Heights last summer was struck by the natural reservoir suggested by the tract which Mr. Lowry offers to donate. He examined the ground and took its level with a future reservoir in mind. There are about twelve acres constituting a big, dry hole, the bottom of which is 297 feet above the city datum. The cost of constructing the reservoir will be about $150,000.

Northern Pacific Loses.

Washington, May 28.—The case of Richard V. Barden and others against the Northern Pacific Railway company has been decided by the United States supreme court. As a test case it involves the title to many thousands of acres of mineral lands along the Northern Pacific railway, principally in Montana, and included within the land grants to the road from the government under the act of July 2, 1864. Under the terms of this act mineral lands were excluded from the terms of the grant. Mineral deposits of gold and silver were discovered on some of the lands several years after the railroad had taken possession, and suits over the title ensued, the question at issue being whether the language of the act meant that only lands found to be mineral when the grant was made were exempt from its operations, or whether subsequent discoveries that the lands were mineral in character would deprive the company of any title to such lands. The decision is against the Northern Pacific.

Rifles for Militia.

Washington, May 28—Senator Perkins to-day introduced in the senate a bill intended to grant the use of Springfield rifles and their equipments now on hand and not needed for use by the regular army to the militia of the various states and territories. These arms are to be distributed upon the requisition of the governors of the various states, but are to remain the property of the United States, and are to be charged against the appropriation to provide arms to the militia.

Miners Strike.

Henderson, Ky., May 28.—One hundred and fifty miners in the Dekoven mines struck last night and 100 men in the Jarvis mines, just outside the city limits, struck this morning. They were willing to mine coal for home use, but refused to mine any for shipment. The Bisket Coal company's mines have resumed work with fifty non-union men. It is believed that the miners of the St. Charles and Earlington mines, numbering about 300, will also strike.

Parker E. Sanborn Dead.

Aberdeen, S. D., May 28.—Parker E. Sanborn, county commissioner and one of the largest farmers of northwestern Brown county, died suddenly at the Samaritan hospital last night, aged forty-eight years. He was a native of New Hampshire and had been here twelve years. The funeral will be held at Frederick to-morrow under Masonic auspices.

Small Fire at Albert Lea.

Albert Lea, Minn., May 28.—About midnight last night fire was found in the basement of Wohlhunter's hardware establishment in a lot of paper and rags. The damage from the fire was not heavy, but smoke and water created havoc. It was insured.

Guilty of Attempted Assault.

Maiden Rock, Wis., May 28.—A man named Wellington was arrested to-day, charged with an attempt to assault Mrs. Fred Schuller. He pleaded guilty and was sent to jail to await a hearing in the June term of court.

Little Girl Burned to Death.

Hayward, Wis., May 28.Yesterday afternoon, while playing near a brush fire on her father's farm, the clothes of Trold Munson's six-year-old daughter caught fire and she was so severely burned that she died at 9 o'clock.

A SWINDLE STOPPED.

AN IMPORTANT ARREST MADE BY CHICAGO POLICE.

The Secretary and Treasuer of the Commercil Information Company Is Placed Under Arrest on the Charge of Forgery.

Chicago, May 28.—Hugh Rodgers, who is said to be at the head of a gang of advertising swindlers, was arrested yesterday on a charge of forgery. The Union Horseshoe Nail company is complainant in the case. The gang has operated in every large city from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast in the last five years, and the amount it has fraudulently obtained is said to exceed $100,000.

About twenty persons have been engaged in the work. Their scheme was to solicit advertising for a business directory, of which more than 100 copies were never published, and after getting contracts for space from business men the agents of the "company" would collect money on these contracts three or four times. The "company" has had several titles, among them being the Register Publishing company, the International Publishing company, the Business Register, the Commercial Register, the Commercial Publishing company, and the Commercial Guide.

Rodgers, who is believed to be one of the leaders of the concern, is the son of a reputable San Francisco publisher. While in the employ of his father he gained a thorough knowledge of the advertising business, and being of good address and suave manners, he had no difficulty in getting the confidence of business men.

About three years ago the gang began operations in this city, and represented that the headquarters of the "company" were in the Chronicle building, San Francisco. At that time one Stanley Francis styled himself the president of the "company." R. H. Donelly, publisher of the Lakeside Directory, got after Francis and made it so unpleasant for him that he had to leave Chicago. It is said that Francis is now in New York, where he is engaged in the same business.

Rodgers is a protege of Francis, and so proficient has he become in the business that he is now the Western manager of the concern. He is about thirty-five years old, and has a wife and family on the North side. When arrested he feigned surprise, and said he would bring suit against the officers for false imprisonment. Papers showing that he was connected with the Commercial Guide—the latest name by which the concern is known—were found in his pockets.

Mr. Donelly, publisher of the Lakeside Directory, is probably responsible for his arrest. In canvassing the city for this year's directory Mr. Donelly's agents have found evidences of Rodgers' work. The gang is said to have operated in St. Paul, Minneapolis and other Western cities.

Longs for a Receiver.

St. Joseph, Mo., May 28.—A great sensation in business circles was created here by the filing of a petition in the United States court by David L. Newberg of New York, asking that a receiver be appointed for the Schuster National bank, alleging fraud on the part of the cashier, S. A. Walker. The trouble arose from the failure of A. N. Schuster & Co. a month ago. The petition states that Newberg is a stockholder in the bank, and is also a creditor of Schuster to a large amount. Newberg asserts that prior to the consolidation of the Schuster National bank with the Saxton National bank the bank had loaned Schuster & Co., whom they knew to be in a failing condition, over $100,000, and that he believes the bank loaned him that amount when their agreement with the stockholders forbade it. Schuster was one of the bank officials. Newberg says that Walker deceived him, and he makes other charges.

A Long Lost Son.

Minneapolis, May 28.—"Gen." Charles T. Kelly, the man who has been floating down the Mississippi with the largest contingent of the Coxey army, is a long-lost son. Not only that, but he is the son of Mrs. James Kelly of Minneapolis, mother of Miss Maud Kelly, who is a well known and popular local singer. The family residence is at 816 Seventh street south. Twelve years ago, when "Gen." Kelly was twenty-two years old, he left his home at Kansas City and until two weeks ago had been lost to his family. He has never been seen by them and they have never had one word from him during all these years.

Killed Two With One Shot.

Pineville, Ky., May 28.—James Howard and James Slusher were drinking at Howard's home last night. Howard's wife endeavored to quiet them. Howard got a Winchester rifle, and during the scuffle the gun was discharged, the ball piercing the woman's brain. She was holding in her arms a baby. Her dead body fell violently on the baby, crushing its life out. Slusher has been arrested, but Howard has not yet been caught.

Great Watch Factory Being Sold

Elgin, Ill., May 28.—President Avery, of the Elgin National Watch company, notified the stockholders to-day that a representative of an English syndicate has offered $7,000,000 for the plant, and the holders of three-fourths of the stock have agreed to the sale.

The French Anarchs.

Paris, May 28.—Since the arrest of three anarchists, Guerin, Beautien and Gauch, the police have discovered that the latter paid Muller, who is also in custody, to execute the bomb outrage in Liege. Gauch is also shown to have been the accomplice of Matha and Fenon in the Cafe Foyot explosion.

Great Loss of Life in China.

San Francisco, May 28.—A recent freshet along the Han river in China caused great damage and loss of life. About 600 bodies have been recovered, 1,000 houses having been destroyed.

Stolen Documents.

Rome, May 28.—All the documents which the public prosecutor had collected in connection with the prosecution of the directors and other officials and persons connected with the Banco Romano case have mysteriously disappeared, and it is supposed that they have been stolen.

The Crandall Case.

Sioux Falls, S. D., May 28.—Judge Jones this morning continued until next term the case of the state vs. C. C. Crandall, for forgery, because C. B. Pinney, the ex-bookkeeper, cannot be found.

St. Hilaire Spectator.

ST. HILAIRE, - MINNESOTA.

With the destructive floods at the east and withering frosts at the west, the people are feeling a still heavier load under the burden of hard times. The resignation of the French ministry following its defeat on what appears to be a question of small importance, is indicative of the very slender tenure on which it has held office. There are so many factions in the French chamber of deputies that it is difficult to form a ministry which can command a majority on all the numerous issues which come up in that body.

Base ball has broken out with great severity among the Indians on the Western plains. It is a little singular that the noble red man always adopts the vices, but not the virtues of his white brother. He takes to the smallpox and whisky bottle as naturally as a duck takes to water, and it now seems probable that the race decimation will be completed by indulgence in the base ball mania.

The storm of last week did all kinds of mischief on the lakes and in Chicago. One of its unkind deeds was the destruction of the famous old cottonwood tree that stood on the site of he Dearbrn massacre. The remains have been pretty thoroughly appropriated already for souvenir purposes by people who appreciate what a place the veteran had in the history and traditions of Chicago.

While the recent heavy rains have somewhat retarded the growth of wheat, and some damage has been done in a few localities, the reported injury by frosts proves to be immaterial. As yet there is nothing in the crop conditions calculated to cause apprehensions of a shortage, and with average weather from now to harvest time the Northwest will show a yield of wheat equal to the average of former years.

Even the wood choppers of the northern forests are beginning to feel the competition of electricity. A platinum wire heated to incandescence burns its way through a tree in about one-eighth the time required to do the same work by chopping or sawing. It is predicted in Canada that this method will be universally employed in tree felling and sawing rough lumber in a few years.

An English May Day.

Baroness Burdette-Coutts clasped the gold chain and cross that Mr. Ruskin annually gives to the "May Queen" at Whitelands College, Chelsea, round the neck of Miss Emma Hands, the young lady elected to that pretty distinction by her fellow-students. The May Day observances began with a festal service in the college chapel, which was beautifully decorated with spring flowers; and after last year's "Queen Dowager" had gracefully abdicated, and a chaplet of apple blossoms had been placed on the head of the newly found sovereign, an intricate May-pole dance was performed in the great hall, while the "Queen" retired to assume her regal robes. Baroness Burdett-Coutts said that she hoped the day would be a pleasantly memorable one in all their young lives, and that the winner of Mr. Ruskin's beautiful gift would find it one of her greatest pleasures in the future to bring to other minds and homes some of the lessons of love and gentleness to be found in his works.—London Telegraph.

A FEARFUL RIDE.

The young people of to-day can scarcely realize what a "straw ride" was like a hundred years ago, or that the fun-provoking excursion enjoyed so much nowadays had an ancient and necessary origin. It is probable, however, that as much fun and laughter accompanied the straw ride then as now, for young people are alike in all ages and the world over.

When our English forefathers settled in the New Hampshire states, especially Vermont and New Hampshire, they established their homes upon the highlands, because strange as it now seems, the larger lakes, ponds and rivers—where the beautiful meadows now are—were compassed about with miles and miles of thickly wooded swamps, which were almost impassable even in summer.

Last summer I climbed the mountain which is the scene of this story, and counted there forty old cellar holes, overgrown with grass and brush, but indisputable evidence of former homes.

I asked stupidly—feeling certain the answer would be, "Killed by Indians or devoured by wild beasts"—"Where did all the people go to who lived there?" The practical one of our party answered, "Oh, they moved down gradually, for as the woods were cut off, the swamps dried up."

A hundred years ago the settlers on the mountain made nothing of the deep snows which in winter covered all that country, but turned out with shovels and ox-sleds—the only vehicles known in the mountains in those times—and manfully "broke roads," in order that their social intercourse with their "Notchite" friends might not be interrupted.

Especially was this the case in a certain winter, when Mr. Stevens, the most "forehanded" of them all, had built a frame mansion and was going to give a house-warming ball. A string of ox-teams was sent over the rough, drifted road, and all was ready for the revelers. There were enough young people to fill two sleds, and Thad Waldo and Freeman Eddy, each of whom owned two yoke of oxen, were chosen as teamsters. Their sleds were filled with straw and blankets, ready for their respective loads, and they started merrily off at 4 o'clock, reaching their destination before dark. They stayed there until 3 in the morning, gayly dancing and feasting, with never a thought of danger.

When the teamsters went out to "tackle up" for the return home they found the sky heavy with dark clouds and much warmer than when they came over.

"Guess we're going to have our January thaw," remarked young Waldo.

"And I'm afraid we will get a slump over the south side. It won't be very easy riding over those stumps and stones," remarked Eddy.

For a mile or so the high spirits of the party made the woods and mountains ring with song and laughter; but by the time they reached the heights, the fatigue of the dance began to tell on them, and the younger of them commenced making pillows of the laps of their elders, who, also, soon became silent.

Waldo and Eddy, as they reached the notch, jumped from their sleds to better guide the teams down the mountain, and the latter shouted as he reached the road, "Old Buck and Bright will be more lively company than that sleepy crowd."

The drowsy ripple of laughter which followed this sally was suddenly drowned by a horrible scream which seemed to fairly fill the pass, echoing and re-echoing through the mountains as if being answered by a hundred others.

The two teamsters sprang quickly to the head of their teams, now trembling and cuddling up to each other in fright. The men knew that they had only a moment to prevent a wild stampede down the mountain; for, as soon as the poor oxen should recover from their first alarm they would seek safety in flight, when it seemed impossible that the whole party could escape being dashed to pieces.

Every person in the company, from the oldest to the youngest, fully appreciated their double danger. They knew that that defiant scream came from a hungry panther—and that it meant death.

Instantly every young man on the sleds had his gun to his shoulder—they never went without them in "those good old days"—peering sharply among the hemlocks which lined the road for the two fiery eyes, the only part of the ugly beast they expected to see in the cloudy darkness. Failing a shot they knew that he would jump for them when they passed under the tree where he had lodged when he gave his warning scream. Should he miss it would in nowise end the chase, for they knew that by his huge vaulting springs he could soon forge ahead to a vantage ground in another tree.

The road through which these hapless young people took their fearful ride is nearly obliterated now by a sturdy growth of young trees, except "Three Ledges," around which the road ran. No trees can ever cover those cruel rocks. Here was the fearful climax which must end such a race, even should they keep together until they reached the ledges.

In thirty seconds quick-witted young Waldo had unhitched his leading oxen and turned them into the deep snow, hoping that they might possibly attract the panther. Thus he obtained also a better chance to control the others. By this time a second scream, more defiant than the other, rang through the woods.

This second scream came from behind them over through the notch, and was immediately answered by the first, making the poor, trembling oxen fairly bound with fright, and this time sending them off on a mad gallop. The teamsters instinctively caught hold of yoke and horn. Young Waldo shouted back to those in the sleds, "Hold on for your lives!"

It was an almost useless warning. The young men who had risen were thrown among those who had not, their extended guns dealing cruel blows as they fell. But not a word of fear or complaint was uttered by the young settlers, and no sound was heard for a few minutes except Waldo's and Eddy's shouts in their endeavors to check the mad speed of their teams; yet it seemed to those in the sleds, as they tossed and bounded from side to side, catching and losing their holds upon the stakes, that the next stump or stone must certainly wreck them.

Even the panther was forgotten in their efforts to keep their places, until the chase was freshly announced by the united screams of the panthers, now certainly both behind them. That the oxen had distanced them in their first mad run was plain, but that gave the unfortunate straw riders no hope of an ultimate escape, for they could now count by the screams the rapidly made jumps of their pursuers, which were fast closing in upon them.

Waldo's team, though much winded, was running fairly well, through his timely forethought in turning loose his leaders, while Eddy, who had had barely time to catch the horn of his near ox, had no control over his leaders, which, in their successive frights at each scream from the panthers, bolted frightfully, adding to their danger as well as lessening their chances of escape by flight.

It would seem that the dangers already surrounding the party could not be increased, but those in the last sled became suddenly aware that Waldo's abandoned leaders were in the road behind them. They recognized the danger immediately, and tried, by flinging out their free arms and shouting, to change the course of the pursuing oxen, but the poor, terror-blinded creatures plunged straight on, heeding nothing.

There was no time to escape this new danger, had the occupants of the sled any strength to do aught but hold on, and each face turned toward the end of the sled awaiting the crash of the galloping hoofs upon the sled boards. But when the shock came, it almost seemed that Providence interfered to save them, for only one ox planted his feet over the endboard, while the other fell with only his big horns and head inside, where by a miracle they hung, only to be savagely shaken off by the next stump or stone.

The continually nearing screams of the panthers showed that they were still in hot pursuit, and there was a regretful hope in each mind that the poor oxen might not be able to rise, thereby becoming a sacrifice for the safety of the load of human beings clinging to the sled.

Not so; for in a moment, just as a panther sprang from a tree across the road, probably not fifty feet behind the sled, the oxen were in the road again and madder than ever with fright.

Eddy, who had been obliged to look ahead, though comprehending fully all that had occurred behind, knew what the others did not, that Waldo's team must be far ahead, for he had not heard nor seen anything of him for a long time; and they themselves were flying past the "Boulder Spurs," with the three dangerous ledges less than a half-mile beyond.

Turning his face back, he shouted hoarsely, "For God's sake, shoot the oxen and be quick about it, for we are nearing the ledges!"

Two shots instantly answered his command, and in the short interval of partial silence that ensued, he heard two sounds, which, strong, brave man as he was, he never forgot, and always remembered with a sense of unforgiven cruelty. It was a long, mournful "loo," a pitiful petition for help, as it were, from one of the doomed oxen; and, "Oh, see! The poor thing is dragging his mate!" in a sweet, girlish voice. But soon the fellow was left far behind, and when they heard the next scream from the panthers an agonized bellow followed, telling of the fate of the oxen.

For a while all believed themselves free from the panthers, and the oxen which were drawing them evidently shared their belief, for they showed signs of slackening speed; though ten minutes before it had seemed as though nothing could save the party from being swept over the ledges, if carried upon them with such fearful speed. Now all began to hope that the team might be slowed up sufficiently to allow them to jump off. They began to take an interest in young Eddy's effort to stop his oxen, and even noticed that Waldo was not ahead of them. They saw that Eddy was redoubling his efforts to slacken up with a vigorous use of his thick goad upon the noses of his oxen. The stick had not left his hand in all that terrible ride down the mountain. Then he shouted, "Get ready to jump, when I tell you, and jump to the upper side."

A few more cruelly vigorous blows. Then, jerking the head of his near ox sharply round, he cried, "Jump!" And with one wild shout the whole sled load landed in a struggling mass in the deep soft snow.

Young Eddy, when he saw his sled empty, let go his hold on his oxen and fell backward, through sheer exhaustion; but almost immediately he sprang to his feet again in horror. The worst danger they had been in to-night was upon them, for either one of the former pursuers, or an entirely new comer, had uttered his blood-curdling scream just over their heads.

They were in a narrow opening only a few feet from the first ledge, where there was a sheer descent of sixty feet, with a rise of twenty-five feet of broken rock above them. Nothing could save them now from an encounter with a hungry panther.

Were the poor oxen fated that night, one and all, to perish that their precious load might be saved?

The oxen had made but a few staggering bounds away, just to the open ledge, when they were checked and sent huddling and backing upon each other again by the sudden renewal of danger, and the leaders, in their efforts to get back to their human friends, turned completely round upon the other yoke, twisting them until the sled grated over the ledge.

Just for a moment the horrified young people forgot their own danger as they watched the white stripes in the leaders' faces and listening to the sound of the sled runners on the rocky ledge; then another death-threatening scream, and the huge body shot through the misty air. There was a frightful bellowing, and a short scramble of hoofs; then sled, oxen and panther disappeared, to be heard from but once more with a crashing thud as they struck the rocks below.

The suppressed feelings of the straw-riders found vent this time in a regular stampede for their homes: the girls were crying and sobbing and unconditionally accepted help from the young men; and all, though it was midwinter, forgot completely their lost wraps, caps, hoods and mittens.

All thought for certain that Waldo's team must have gone over the ledge, but only a few of the strongest young men had breath to express their grief or pity. Their surprise and joy were about equal, after they had recovered their breath sufficiently to see, count and remember names, to find in the crowd of settlers coming out to meet them every individual of the first load.

Waldo and Eddy suffered the most from the adventure; Eddy had rheumatic fever. Waldo constituted himself doctor and nurse-in-general to him, and they talked over many a time the fearful incidents of the ride.

The two places where the oxen fell were made the common hunting grounds of both settlements, and many a panther, wolf and fox were killed there before the winter was through.

The afternoon sun fell aslant of the street car and illuminated the ears of the off horse with an aureola of glory.

"Oh, thank you."

The youth stood a moment, dazed. Then he fled and walked the streets for four hours with quick, nervous tread.

"In justice to myself I must," he muttered.

With resolute face he proceeded to the home of his fiancee, whom he informed, briefly, that there was less of disparity between the ideal and the actual in woman than he had supposed, and would she kindly learn to forget him.

An old maid at least seventy years of age was helped into a chair in the office of a New York police justice. She was very much excited.

"Do I understand you to say that you think your pocket was picked by a young man who sat alongside of you in a Third avenue car?"

"Yes, I'm sure of it. He squeezed me up in the corner so that I could scarcely breathe, and he kept smiling at me, and smiling at me, as if he knew me."

"Why did you permit him to do that. Why did you not complain to the conductor?" asked the justice.

"I—I—"

"Out with it."

"I thought perhaps he was—he—was—"

"Was what?"

"Going to propose to me."

"I dare say it is so. You can't rely on young men nowadays. Only woman is faithful to her love. So you dreamt my would-be husband went back on me. I wonder whether it is Charlie? He was here night before last and I think, perhaps, it was Dick; he always was a flirt. I have never trusted him! I wonder if Frank has had the meanness to jilt me for that lavender-haired girl he took to the theater? All that's the way these men are. You can't rely on three or four young men, much less on one."

Maimed.

In the calm of evening the old man was driving home the cows.

His mind dwelt on other days. He saw the fresh, healthy face of his only son turned in farewell for a moment, then gone, perhaps forever.

"It was the call of duty," the father murmured. "It is not for me to repine."

"My boy, my boy."

He raised his eyes.

He was come again. A wan face instead of the glow of health, an empty sleeve, a crutch, but it was he.

"Yes," the youth explained, "I have my degree all right. I'm a trifle shy on legs and arms, but I'd like to call your attention to my hair. Ain't she a beaut?"

Drawing his diploma from his bosom, he showed that he spoke truly.

Concession.

The great man with white side whiskers setting off his red neck couldn't think of it.

"I'm very sorry," he repeated, "but $7—a week is all I can afford to pay you."

The youth with pallid features and a longing look, lingered at the threshold.

"May I—"

He turned yet again to plead.

"—refer to my remuneration as salary instead of wages without fear of contradiction by you?"

There was a long and painful silence, after which the youth crept away, and despair was written all over his face.

"Fair, fair, with golden hair."

He took the second seat from the head of the table in a sort of trance.

The words of the song rang in his ears. His thoughts were far away. Men spoke to him, but he heard them not. Women told him it was a beautiful day, but the information fell upon deaf ears.

"Fair, fair, with golden hair."

They brought him food. He started violently and looked furtively about him.

"Fare, fare, with golden hair!"

Yes, there it was, two strands of it in the Irish stew.

Her lashes drooped upon her suffused cheek.

"Are you prepared?" he demanded, in low, thrilling tones, "to stand before the world and declare your love for me?"

"No, no," she faltered, "not yet."

"Why, darling?"

Her head sank upon his shoulder.

Marriage in High Life.

There are people in New York who toady after the rich. The following conversation took place in a Third avenue street car:

"So your sister is married?"

"Yes, and she did very well—splendid. You have heard of Vanderbilt?"

"Oh, yes. Did she marry into that family?"

"Well, yes, so to speak. She married a nephew of Vanderbilt's chief cook. He is the driver of a street car."

Forewarned.

They were personal enemies.

"Sir," exclaimed the leading lady, as they stood together at the front of the stage, while the gallery held its breath, "I defy you to do your worst."

"Ha," said the villain aside, "she must know of eggs in the audience."

Turning then, he shouted aloud, and triumphantly:

"Never!"

ENTERTAINING GOSSIP FOR THE WOMEN.

Women and the Law—Artistic Designing—Aluminum Strips in Dress Skirts—Cleaning Black Goods—Fashion and Fancy.

Man-made law has not been unfair, of late, at least, to women. A husband cannot dispose of his wife's dower in his lands without her consent. A wife can sell her lands and give absolute title thereto without the consent of her husband, just as if she were single. A husband can be made to pay for necessaries supplied to his wife. A wife is free from such liability for her husband's needs. A wife's dower right exists with or without a will, and cannot be divested without her consent. A wife can will away all her lands and all her other property without making provision for her husband. Women debtors against whom legal judgments have been found are exempt from the execution of such judgments in cases which, so far as men are concerned, are limited only to those who are householders. Married women have broader household exemptions than men. In New York city a man who fails to pay a woman employe wages due up to $50 is liable to arrest, and none of his property is exempt from execution for the debt. In Brooklyn a man is similarly liable who fails to pay a woman employe, other than a domestic servant, wages up to $50. Women are substantially exempt from arrest in all civil cases. To arrest a woman "willful injury to person, or property," or such an evasion of duty as would be a contempt of court, must be shown in all civil cases. The factory laws and other laws affecting like employment are replete with provisions for the exceptional care of women who are employes. The rights of wives as to the guardianship of children are the same as those of husbands. Insurance on a man's life, paid to his widow, is exempt from execution for her debts. No execution against the person of a woman can be issued unless on an order of arrest granted and executed in a legal action. A man is bound to obey and help an officer of the peace or a sheriff when quelling a disturbance or making an arrest. Woman is free from any such command. Man is liable to be called on to take up arms for law or authority and to expose himself to injury or to death. Woman is free from military service. Men are liable to jury duty. Woman is free from it.

Artistic Designing.

This has been confined to a few specialists, whose work is deserving of all praise, but it is only necessary for an observing person to enter an average home to see how very superficially the appreciation of truly artistic surroundings has permeated the mass of the inhabitants of our island.

The producers of cheap textiles, carpets and other goods have elected to cover almost all their productions with patterns and designs. By far the larger number of these (so-called) decorations are inartistic and disturbing to the eye. In one small room we often see congregated and crowded together every possible and impossible decoration. The walls and ceilings are covered with patterns. Patterns crawl over the chintzes and curtains, and the carpets are either mosaics, of imitation Eastern coloring, or else are covered with a sprawling arrangement of leaves and spotty flowers. The tiles and grates still further prove the modern mania for littering everything with patterns; while even architects to meet the popular taste carve the lintels and architraves of the doors and windows, or cover them with conventional mouldings and plaster decorations.

Now, the result of all this is that the eye becomes fatigued, and when a really fine and noble design is placed in such a room, it fails to produce its effect, because of the undergrowth of futile patterns that already cover every available space of the floors, ceilings, walls and furniture. How much the English might learn from the Japanese in the art of leaving large spaces undecorated so that the single good design, the graceful spray of almond blossom, the group of flying birds, the one fine bronze or porcelain vase should have the proper advantage, and the spectator's attention not be distracted from them by a rabble of inartistic patterns and ornaments with which so many folks nowadays make their sitting rooms hideous.—Fortnightly Review.

Aluminum Strips in Dress Skirts.

Some women have had their spring gowns made with aluminum strips in the bottom. The metal is so springy, yet is not ungracefully stiff, but it is open to objections. Out in the West End recently I saw a pretty young girl come tripping down the steps of her home, clad in a charming new gown. She was going to take advantage of the fresh, sweet air and walk. She got outside the gate, and giving one of those indescribable shakes that women affect when starting, she took two steps, and—sat down. She sat very hard, and regardless of the fact that the sidewalk was wet from a recent shower!

It was evidently much easier to sit down than it was to get up, for she scrambled around in great shape before she got the high heel of her small boot extricated from the steel in the bottom of her new gown. If you want to make that young lady furious just mention steels to her.

Sleeves have got to the point where the lavish use of material calls for a prop, and it has come in the shape of a wire, which is ingeniously inserted in the top of the voluminous sleeve drapery and holds it out in shape.

This will do in some kinds of society, but at an official reception at the White House or one of the sought-after affairs at one of the legation houses a wire-sleeve would stand a poor show for symmetry. Revers have reached the highest point of absurdity and soon will hasten to their decline and fall. So wide are they now that they lop over in an exasperating way unless pinned down.

The fancy stick pins have served the country well in fastening the revers to the tops of sleeves, but they have their disadvantages, and jabbed unmercifully at most inopportune times, so some brilliant creature, struck with an idea, had hers boned.

From the throat right out to the point of the revers she had her dressmaker put a whalebone. It straightened out the refractory flaps in fine shape, but if a gale of wind should happen to strike the wearer of such a gown she would soar along before the breeze with all sails set in a fashion that she would not like. The incurable low has been given a bone also. It is fan-plaited under a close knot at the throat, and the bow ends that reach and soon will hasten to their decline and out on the shoulder have a bone stitched in to keep them open and out. That puts an end to the popularity of that piece of attire.—Boston Advertiser.

Cleaning Black Goods.

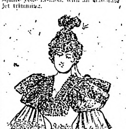
Henrietta, cashmere, serge and such black goods, if of good quality, well repay one for all the cleaning given them. Remove the grease spots thoroughly from the goods, then wash in warm soapsuds, using a pure, not strong, soap, in which dissolve borax at the rate of a teaspoonful to two quarts of water; rinse in very blue water and iron on the wrong side, whilst damp, with a moderate iron.

Do not rub the goods on a washboard, but souse them up and down and wring very gently, so as not to pull or twist the fabric.

Another plan suggests soaking the black cashmere in warm soapsuds for two hours, then dissolving an ounce of extract of logwood in a bowl of warm water and adding sufficient water to cover the goods, and then allowing them to stand in this mixture all night. In the morning rinse in four waters, and to the last a pint of sweet milk; clap the material between the hands in place of wringing, hang on a line until nearly dry and iron while damp on the wrong side. Always iron until the goods are perfectly dry.—Philadelphia Times.

Its First Appearance.

Here is a new bodice which is novel and effective enough to suit the most fastidious young woman. The bodice proper is of guipure Venice lace. The corsage is cut low and outlined in square yoke fashion, with an elaborate jet trimming.



A bow and a fall of lace form the sleeve, but the bow is of wide black moire ribbon and falls in graceful loops from the shoulder, where it is held by a glistening jet crescent; from below the ribbon the lace falls, the creamy guipure Venice, with a generous fullness that is beautiful to behold.

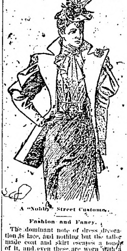
There will be a little bonnet made to match this waist if the wearer be wise. It will be formed of a lattice work of jet balls with two black tips frosted with jet piquantly nodding towards the back.—New York World.

A Gorgeous Trousseau.

The trousseau of Miss Anna Gould is to cost $1,000,000. The gowns will be nearly all ordered here, as Mrs. George Gould, who has the buying of the trousseau, believes in spending money in the country in which it is made.

There is an order for twelve morning gowns. They are silk and are loose, with ribbons for belts and bunches of ribbons for trimming, also just simple things for slipping on in the morning for the cup of chocolate. It is unlikely that Miss Gould will have them laundered—she with her $2,000 a week to spend for life—but they can be so treated. Their cost is $40 on the average—not bad for silk gowns.

The predominant shade in the trousseau is the new shade of red—rose red. It is called by some and tea rose by others, while still others call it light petunia; anyway it is the color of the inside of the leaf of a full-blown American Beauty rose. It combines sweetly with green and heliotrope. Miss Gould has it combined in the choicest possible French style with both of these, and she will be a picture, for she is not too light nor too dark for such striking combinations.



A "Nobby" Street Costume.

Fashion and Fancy.

The dominant note of dress decoration is lace, and nothing but the tailor made coat and skirt escapes a touch of it, and even these are worn with a lace-trimmed blouse or the fancy bow which absorbs so much attention.

Millinery shows a continuance of the popular idea of flowers lying flat on the brims, in apparent subservience to high loops of ribbon, velvet ears or nodding tips, though one long-stemmed rose or floral pompon may do duty. Here the great run upon violets, and they are now a favorite combination with roses, of which one with long stem often rises from the midst of the first-named flowers, whether in natural purple or black, the latter being extremely stylish.

Some of the June brides in London will forswear the regulation white gowns for cloth ones that can be used for more general wear than the satin costumes. A bride in London wore recently a gown of pale heliotrope-faced cloth; the bodice, which was made in the shape of a zouave, edged with silver cord, having revers faced with velvet to match, opened over a white silk waistcoat brocaded with tiny bouquets of violets, and finished off with a jabot of point lace at the throat; the skirt was caught up with a silver hook and eye over a petticoat of the same cloth, edged with silver cord. The traveling costume was of Russian brown faced cloth, with the tight-fitting coat bodice having revers and collar ornamented with an applique design on a ground of rose pink; the full vest and collar being of bengaline silk in the same shade of pink. The skirt was bordered with an applique to match.

A FEMININE FENIAN.

"What! Another fenian!"

"Waal, I wouldn't go ez fur ez callin' her thet, James Francis. Of course, bein' a Methody, er Baptis', either hard er soft, kinder sots 'spicion on her in Otter Crik, but a fenian!" The worthy postmistress shook her head in charitable doubt. "I wouldn't prefer sich a ser'us charge. She's a pleasant spoken young critter an' not 'tall rev'looshanry lookin'."

"Kelly wuz a fenian," asserted a veteran farmer, deftly balancing a demijohn of molasses against the sundry contents of a huge bandanna handkerchief. "Pears ez ef this deestric' is jes' runnin' riot after sich firebrands."

Kelly was the late incumbent of Otter Creek, discharged by the selectmen on three counts; age, subscription to incendiary literature and indifference to arithmetical accuracy, as proved by his favorite formula, "If you come within three figgers of the answer you're nigh enough."

"She hes smilin' eyes," irrelevantly remarked an imprudent youth sorting out hand rakes in the corner.

"Hit a'ready, Abe," sneered the veteran. "Smilin' eyes be blowed! Fer a sarviceable schoolmarm give me a savage lookin' gal. Howdy s'pose this un 'ill rassle 'ith the mill gang?"

"I don't favor her persuasion," candidly admitted the stalwart James Francis, "but for all that I'm for giving her a fair trial, even though she does turn the boss' head on the wrong road to meetin'."

"Taint the boss' head alone 'at 'll be turned the wrong way," scoffed the grumbler; "every durn young fool in Otter Crik is ready ter foller suit. Smilin' eyes, indeed! I don't b'lieve she kin figger through fraxions, an' fust chance I git I'm goin' ter stick her on the contents of them logs out'n the school yard. I don't b'lieve in wimmin teachers anyway; but ef the Crik can't hire a master for $75 a term an' board, why then it orter look out for the homeliest lookin' female 'at could be hired for money. Enythin' at all pass'ble makes fair idjits of you young fellers."

And grimly "hefting" his burden the veteran departed, followed by a respectful "cantanker'us, meddlin' old cuss!" from the enamored Abe.

"Here she comes now, a-caperin' down the hill with them Tucker children," remarked the postmistress, a pleasant smile lighting up her comely face. "It do beat all how a great growed gal an' a schoolma'am at thet, kin frisk along ez giddy an' friv'lus ez eny of her scholars."

Quite unconscious of the interest she had excited, the young teacher came blithely down the hill, her own rapid step still further quickened by the impatient urging of her small charges, the little sailor hat tilted forward over a face pretty only in its youthful curves and happy, frank expression. The postmistress was quite right in deciding that there was nothing revolutionary in her appearance; Abe also was also correct in his opinion of her eyes, and James Francis, viewing her critically, became conscious of an alarming indifference to the manifold evils lurking in her persuasion. So impressed was he by the unfairness of his original remark that, after investing in chocolates for which he had no earthly use, he requested the genial Mrs. Forbes to observe silence on the subject, a favor readily granted and quite as cheerfully withdrawn under the irresistible temptations of a cozy tea, with the girl teacher as her guest.

Teaching in the country is the ordeal through which nearly every tyro must pass before being allowed to engage in city service. Though not the ideal pursuit painted by pen artists, it is the stepping-stone from which many an ambitious worldling hopes to climb to the heights of fame. In her unobtrusive way Cecelia Desmond was ambitious. She coveted a college course, and indulged roseate dreams of a future crowned with honors, won by personal effort. As a step in the right direction, when the Otter Creek vacancy offered she promptly packed her simple wardrobe and said good-by to the dear ones in her city home. It was the first separation, and the ache of parting throbbing in six hearts expressed itself in a copious shower of youthful tears, quickly dried, however, in a flash of fun as the strenuous efforts of the stage driver to lash the trunk to the tailboard resulted in the breaking of the rope, sending him sprawling in the roadway.

After a month's experience of the new life the young teacher was beginning to realize that fame asks much of its votaries. The routine of work was wretchedly monotonous, varied only by occasional skirmishes among the different sections of the district. The constituency of Otter Creek academy had many subtle subdivisions based on family feuds or political and religious variance. To unite so many elements in even seeming harmony, and at the same time impart sufficient instruction to satisfy the rather exacting community, was a task of gigantic proportions, and one which the girl in her home letters frequently asserted could be accomplished only by the united efforts of a statesman, a professor and a police officer. As comparison is a relief or a torture free to all, Cecelia fell into the habit of contrasting her fate with her surroundings, and thus became fully conscious that her lot was not as flowery as were the meadows stretching along the slope and tranquilly monopolizing the fertile interval.

From the meadows her thoughts reverted naturally to their owner, the fair-minded young farmer who had championed her cause even while condemning her belief. He was one of nature's noblemen, she admitted rather grudgingly, and censured herself severely for allowing her thoughts to dwell pleasurably on his masterful manner and vigorous, manly beauty. At such times, to atone for her mental vagaries, she locked herself in her sultry chamber, and, forcing her intellect to the contemplation of some abstruse problem, beguiled herself into the belief that she was fairly reveling in an intellectual Elysum.

Notwithstanding this severe, self-inflicted discipline, youth at times ran riot and urged Cecelia to the commission of many acts not at all compatible with the dignity of her position or her lofty intellectual pretensions. The orchards, berry patches and sweet smelling hay fields were responsible for many of her deviations from the college course, but that the handsome James Francis was also an active agent was fairly well known even before the veteran farmer made his next visit to the postoffice, and volunteered the information, "James Francis an' the fenian air gettin' kinder soc'ble; he's mowin' the long medder an' she's drivin' the machine. So sot on each other 'at they couldn't see me goin' by."

"She's a-drivin' James Francis ez waal ez the mower," laughed Mrs. Forbes. "You mark my words, Obediah, afore the snow blows the selectmen 'll hev the school on their hands. Shucks; the crossest grained old cormorant 'at ever lived 'ud jes' hev to smile seein' them young things go by. Lor', they don't know theirselves how far gone they are. It minds me of when Jabez an' me used ter come from meetin' ez if we wuz walkin' on air."

"You wuz fully match'd," snarled the malcontent, "but this un thinks herself a cut above farmer; talks of goin' ter colllidge; pity she wuz ever hired ter the Crik. If they're still in the medder, I'm goin' ter hail 'em on my way back an' say suthin' ez 'ill rile 'em."

"Trust you fer thet, you old crosspatch," muttered Abe, who seemed to be a permanent part of the general store; "it's pizen fer some folks to see others enjyin' theirselves."

"There you go, you blame old meescheef. I jes' hope ef you go meddlin' in the long medder you'll git yer legs twisted inter the mower an' cut off at the jints." And with this awful expression of his wrath Abe went to the door to watch the veteran's movements.

True to his intentions, Obadiah crossed the intervening fields, and, leaning on the fence inclosing the meadow, hollowed his hands into a trumpet, and bawled across:

"Hull-oo, James Francis! Help so scurse 'at you hev ter hire fenians?" Then without waiting for a reply ambled off, his shrill, crackling laugh adding to the annoyance of the haymakers.

"Don't you think you ought to apologize?" asked the girl, quickly regaining composure.

"For what?" He came round to the horses' heads, and from that vantage point looked steadily into the driver's eyes.

"For calling me a fenian; you were very unkind."

"I didn't mean to be," awkwardly; then humbly, "haven't I made up for it since?"

"But I was a stranger then," insisting on her injury. "That's why it hurt me so."

"I wouldn't hurt you for the world; you know that, Ceciliar."

The girl winced slightly; his pronunciation of her name was one of the little things that grated on her sensitive taste; but a superfluous letter or two lose force when the aggressor is handsome and spirited. That he was both she acknowledged inwardly and was moved to forgiveness. The moment was fraught with peril for the college scheme. It was receding steadily into the distance; James Francis saw his advantage and meanly pursued it.

"This is as good a time as any to come to an understanding. When I called you a fenian I hadn't even seen you. I don't know that I even knew what a fenian meant. I don't know yet, but of this I am sure, whether you are a nihilist, a fenian or an anarchist, or all three together, I love you."

The horses tossed their heads impatiently, and the man passed his hand soothingly over their glossy coats.

"Let's cut another swath," suggested the girl, irreverently.

"Not another blade," he declared, "until I have my answer. Yes or no?"

"Well, since you will have it, No."

"You don't mean it; say you don't Ceciliar," he pleaded, humbly yet hopefully.

"I do mean it," she asserted, passionately. "I never meant to settle down on a farm. I want to go through college and write A. B. to my name."

"Write Journee instead," he said, with telling insistence. "Give up the school and come home to the farm. Say yes, dear; you'll never regret it."

The fringe of elms, shading the brook rippled through the interval, caught the rays of the setting sun and cast them back again like javelins of light; the girl was dimly aware that evening was on the land. The air was heavy with the fragrance of new-mown hay; shimmering banks of clouds sank down behind the treetops; the chirping of crickets and the far-off croaking of frogs down in the alder swamp mingled with the lowing of cows and the soft trilling of birds seeking their nests, the holy calm of nature soothed even the unrest of a wavering heart, and hushed into silence the promptings of ambition.

"Everything living is going home," said the girl very gently; "let us go, too; see, the sun is nearly gone."

"I am only waiting for my answer," he reminded her.

"Do you know Frank, that you have asked me to renounce the hope of a lifetime? I have struggled so for a higher education." There was a wistful intonation in her voice that love interpreted correctly. She was pleading to be saved from her less noble self.

"We will seek it together," he answered; "dear heart, life has only begun."

Before the snow blew over the meadows Mrs. Forbes' prediction came to pass. The young teacher returned to her city home, but not for long.

"I never thought I could settle down on a farm, mamma," she whispered, during one of the long confidential talks preceding the final going away; "but Frank is—so—so—different."

The mother's face was beautiful, as stroking the sunny head buried in her lap she answered very softly, "A woman's heart is a vexatious thing, my darling; its depths hold many a secret; but," with a tenderly indulgent smile, "love conquers all."—Mary B. O'Sullivan in Donohoe's Magazine.

GENTLEMAN BROWN.

A Benevolent Dog Who Cared for His Vagrant Brothers.

Brown was simply a large dog, who was so strong, so fearless, so intelligent and so active in affairs that he was considerd the champion of the town.

He could thrash any dog round about, and always did it when it was necessafy.

But he was extremely kind and benevolent. He showed great kindness to tramp dogs, and protected many a wretched little vagabond, and saw him safely out of the town in good condition.

One day he brought a specially bad specimen home with him. He came into the house and into the dining room where the family were at dinner, the wretched little tramp dog at his heels.

He looked up at his master wagged his tail, asking for something to eat. A plate of food was set down and the little dog snatched it ravenously. Brown seemed to think that was all right. He did not offer to touch the food. When the little dog was through he asked for another plateful and had his own dinner.

He kept the little dog for quite a while, always permitting him to eat first. At night he took the dog into his kennel; himself sleeping outside.

He was not at all intimate with the dog, but treated him as a visitor, not at any time as a friend. The tramp finally went on his way, strong and well, and as plump and sleek as any dog need be. What was said between these two dogs both at meeting and parting would be very interesting to know.

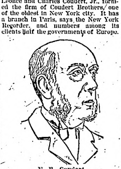
In olden times the Mayor of Leicester, England, was chosen by a sow. The candidates sat in a semi-circle, each holding his hat full of beans in his lap, and he was selected mayor from whose hat the sow ate first.

KNOWN-FAR AND NEAR

GOSSIP ABOUT SOME NOTABLE PEOPLE.

Frederic R. Coudert, a Lawyer of International Fame, Wit, Orator, Lecturer and After-Dinner Speaker —Phenomenal Success in His Profession.

Probably no other lawyer in this country has a greater international reputation that Frederick Rene Coudert who is classed among the leaders of the bar in New York city. He is the oldest son of Charles Coudert, who was an officer in the guard of honor attached to the imperial guard of the first Napoleon, and was condemned to be shot for his participation in a conspiracy to place the duke of Reichstadt, Napoleon II., on the throne. After spending many months in prison he succeeded in escaping to England. He was recaptured later in France, where he went in disguise, but powerful friends aided him in escaping in 1824 to this country, where he spent the remainder of his long life in peace and honor. Frederic received his early education at his father's school in this city, and entered Columbia college at the age of fourteen. He was graduated at the head of his class in 1850 with the highest honors. He was admitted to the bar in 1853, and soon afterward, with his brothers, Louis Leonce and Charles Coudert, Jr., formed the firm of Coudert Brothers, one of the oldest in New York city. It has a branch in Paris, says the New York Recorder, and numbers among its clients half the governments of Europe.



F. R. Coudert.

He has had phenomenal success as a jury lawyer, is never surprised in the court room, and has the happy faculty of making the strongest points against his client appear in a favorable light. As an orator he has few equals. His sparkling wit has often delighted the most eminent men in the country in his post-prandial addresses. Few men have had greater success upon the lecture platform, and his efforts in this line have always been for charitable purposes.

Mr. Coudert has always taken an active part in politics, and is a Democrat. He is ever ready to speak in favor of Democratic principles, and as a stump speaker he is singularly effective. He has persistently refused to be a candidate for any public office, has several times refused a nomination for the supreme court, and in 1888 declined an appointment to the bench of the court of errors and appeals. He did excellent service as a delegate to represent the interests of American commerce in the international congress on the law of nations in Antwerp in 1887, and five years later attended another session of that congress at Liverpool. His services abroad have received the commendation of many governments, and he has received the Cross of the Legion of Honor from France and Italy. Fresh luster was recently added to his fame by his masterly presentation of the case of the United States before the foreign committee in Paris in the Bering sea controversy.

To Succeed Senator Vance.

General satisfaction is felt throughout North Carolina over the appointment of ex-Senator Thomas J. Jarvis as United States senator to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Vance. Mr. Jarvis was born in North Carolina fifty-six years ago, and was denied, through straitened circumstances, the benefits of education until in his teens. Finally friends aided him to secure a course at the Randolph-Macon college, but he did not graduate until 1860, when he established himself as a teacher. He joined the Confederate forces at the outbreak of the war, but, though he participated in many engagements, escaped unscathed until at Drury's Bluff on the 17th of May, 1864, he was disabled by a bullet, which injured his right arm so that it has ever since hung useless. On peace being restored he turned his attention to mercantile pursuits, studying law meanwhile. After being admitted to the bar he took an active interest in politics and in 1868 was elected to the state legislature. To him was largely due the course of events which culminated in the defeat of the Republicans at the next election, and when the new assembly met Capt. Jarvis was rewarded by being chosen speaker. In 1872 he canvassed the state as an elector on the Greeley ticket, and three years later was a member of the constitutional convention. In 1876 Mr. Vance and Capt. Harris were elected governor and lieutenant governor respectively, the latter succeeding Gov. Vance when that gentleman was sent to the United States senate. Gov. Jarvis remained chief executive of the state for six years, his administration resulting in great good to the industries of North Carolina. On his retirement from the gubernatorial office he was appointed minister to Brazil by President Cleveland.

An American by Adoption.

Not a few Scandinavians and others in Chicago and the Northwest generally have pleasant recollections of acquaintance with Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen, now a professor in Columbia college, New York. The professor was born in Fredericksvaern, a little naval station in the south of Norway, where his father was professor of mathematics in a naval academy. The elder Boyeson was an enthusiastic admirer of the United States, having spent several years in this country. When Hjalmar had completed his education his father asked his two sons whether they desired to live at home or try their fortunes in America, at the same time informing them that he had deposited a sum of money with a friend in Chicago. This either of the boys could have by applying for it in person. The two youths started for this country, and took up temporary quarters in Urbana, Ohio. The younger remained there, while Hjalmar came to this city, where he secured a position on a Norwegian weekly which had just been started. The money he sent to his younger brother. After a year's work on the paper Hjalmar, who had literary ambition, became convinced that success was unattainable without a thorough knowledge of the English. He, therefore, resigned his editorship, and, after securing a position as Latin and Greek tutor in an Urbana college, applied himself diligently to the study of the English language. In vacation time he visited Harvard college, where he secured employment as translator of Norwegian works. A book which he had written attracted the attention of some of the college celebrities, who interested themselves in securing a publisher for it, and since then the clever Norwegian author has had comparatively plain sailing.

Statesman in a Blue Blouse.

Last autumn, when seeking the suffrages of his fellow citizens, M. Thivrier, now a member of the French chamber of deputies, closed a somewhat stormy address with the declaration that if elected he would wear a workman's blouse when attending to his legislative duties. Few among even his radical hearers imagined that this was more than a figure of speech, but the idea appealed to the turbulent electors of the Montlucon district, and M. Thivrier was elected. True to his word he appeared in the chamber wearing a blue blouse and carrying in his hand a coarse cap, such as worn by artisans generally. His dress remained the same until during an exciting session he shouted: "Vive la commune." For this explosion he was suspended fifteen days, and on his return recently he had discarded the blue blouse and was dressed more in accordance with the dignity which belongs to the office he holds.

WHISK BROOM WITH EACH DRINK.

The Kind of Whisky They Sold in Leadville in Early Days.

As three men were standing in front of the bar of a Smithfield street saloon yesterday, says the Pittsburg Dispatch, one picked up the glass of whisky that was placed before him and, tasting it, made a face that looked as if he had taken poison. "My, but that's rank stuff," said he as he put down his glass and wiped off his mouth with his handkerchief. "That's almost as bad as the whisky we got out West during the great gold and silver excitement. I remember in Leadville there was a wag kept a saloon who did not try to disguise the quality of the liquor that passed over his bar, but rather made careful preparations for the effects that he knew it would cause. It is said that a tenderfoot once came in and asked for a whisky. He was passed a bottle and a glass. Then to his surprise the bartender placed a small whisk broom by the side of the bottle. Of course he was puzzled, but he poured out his drink and drank it slowly, unwilling to profess ignorance in the ways of the wild West and thinking that some person might come to his rescue. The door opened and he saw a man who saved him. A big, burly fellow, bristling with revolvers and bowie knives, stepped in the door and, going up to the bar, ordered a whisky in a voice that seemed to come from somewhere below the cellar. A bottle and glass were passed to him and, as before, a whisk broom was added to the lay out. The tenderfoot watched the man carefully. He poured out a good-sized glassful, then, after gulping it down, quietly picked up the whisk broom and, going over to a corner of the room, brushed away the sand from a portion of the floor. He then lay down and had a fit. But, of course, all the whisky we got out there was not as bad as that."

Disingenous.

"Come," commanded the plump damsel with the bleached hair.

"Charmed, I'm sure," rejoined the largest snake in the box, hypocritically.

Cut.

"I hear Fledgeby isn't invited out at all this year."

"I guess that's right. I saw him buying an umbrella the other day."

FOR THE FARMERS.

USEFUL INFORMATION CONCERNING THE FARM.

Essentials of Successful Dairying, the Dairyman, the Dairy Cow, Care of the Cows and Handling the Product of the Dairy.

The most important requisites to the successful dairy are the following:

1. The dairyman.

I consider the man stands at the head of the list, for if he is qualified to make dairying a success he will see that the other necessary things are not wanting. He should have a good business education, be of a careful, methodical habit, with a determination to do everything pertaining to the work to the best of his ability. He should be not only able, but thoroughly in earnest, and should appreciate the cows that are under his charge. It would be very unwise to place the sensitive, high-bred Jersey or Guernsey cow in the hands of the average dairyman, because under the care he would be willing to give her she would soon become a very poor investment to him. Until one sees clearly the necessity of kindness, good, warm stabling, pure drinking water, either given her often when stabled, or arranged so she can help herself, knowledge of good feeding rations, cleanliness in every particular, and is willing to devote time to weighing and testing the milk of his cows, it would be better for him to keep his scrub cows and do scrub dairying.

The successful dairyman of to-day is a very different man from the dairyman of the past. He must take good dairy papers, read them carefully and follow their teachings until he at last proves them false. If this were done, instead of an average of 130 pounds of butter or 3,000 pounds of milk each cow could easily make from 250 to 300 pounds of butter, or 5,000 to 7,000 pounds of milk. The writer knows this from practical experience, and believes dairy writers should teach, first, better-bred dairymen, and that it takes a gentleman to handle a dairy of cows successfully.

2. The dairy cow. Since it was found in the test at Chicago last season that the cow giving the richest milk "according to the Babcock test," and most of it, made the most butter, cheese, and the greatest net profit, keep only those cows which give a good quantity of rich milk in butter fat. Whatever the breed, look well to the form of the cow. See that she has the wedge shape, fine, slim neck and head, soft, silken hair, large udder, teats well spread and large, crooked milk veins. These, with a good constitution and capacity for large amounts of rich food, are very important, but above all, look well to her ancestry, for, unless she comes of a family of large milk givers, giving milk rich in fat, and having power to transmit those qualities to her offspring, she will disappoint you.

If you have not such cows, and are unable to get them, select your best native cows for the foundation of your dairy. Now breed them to a full-blooded Jersey or Guernsey bull, coming of a family having the qualities noted above, and a record of not less than 300 pounds of butter, and your heifer calves should be something to be proud of. Breed them right back to their sire, and you will soon have a dairy that, with proper care, will be among the best.

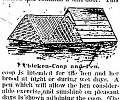
3. Care of the cows. Cultivate the acquaintance of your cows, fondle them, teach them to regard you as their best friend. When I cross the pasture where my cows are kept in the summer time, they all crowd around me and seem disappointed if I do not stop and give them each a caress. This surely shows that they love kindness. And rest assured that it will pay. In making the change from the barn to the pasture great care should be used. Do not be in too great a hurry about getting the cows out to grass. Wait until the grass gets a fair start and the ground gets warmed up, so that the cows will not be chilled when lying down. I believe that is the cause of most cases of garget. Keep up the grain ration for some time, reducing gradually as the grass improves, and the cows will not have that gaunt look so often seen at this time. It will pay to place some bran in each cow's manger before stabling them for milking, as they will be on hand, thus saving time driving them up at night. As soon as the grass begins to fail, have some early sweet corn or peas and oats ready to give to keep up the flow of milk. Keep salt always in their reach. Provide an abundance of pure water, piping it into the stable for winter use, if possible. If butter making be followed, make winter butter, for with cows well taken care of and with such a man as I have described in charge, it will pay the best. Have your cows fresh in milk in the fall, being very careful as soon as the nights become chilly to stable them, also through any cold rains, for cold cows and success do not go together. Have a silo if possible; if not, then secure an abundance of corn fodder, well cured, with some roots, and a good supply of bran, oil meal, corn meal and ground oats. These, with good early cut clover hay, will provide a good range of rich milk-producing food. Now with a warm, well lighted and properly ventilated stable, with absorbents to save all the manure, both liquid and solid, you are ready to feed your cows for profit. Feed liberally, but not blindly. Weigh and compound a balanced ration, which you can learn to do from your dairy papers. Note the capacity of each cow and feed accordingly, as some will be found able to pay for better feeding than others. In order to know this, weigh each cow's product, then, knowing what the feed costs, it is a very easy matter to know whether you are feeding at a profit or loss. I know this is some trouble, but it is the only sure way. I have weighed each cow's milk for the past year, recording the same in a book kept for the purpose. So much for quantity of milk. Now test the milk by the Babcock test a number of times, in order to know the quality each cow gives. Don't depend on the amount of butter you may obtain from a certain amount of milk, for you may lose considerable butter fat in creaming and churning, and so condemn the cow wrongfully. If, after a fair trial, you find you have cows that do not pay, sell them, and the sooner the better. Keep your cows in the barn every night after it begins to get chilly, and as soon as frost kills the grass keep them in all the time unless there is a warm, sunshiny day, when they can be let out for an hour at least without harm.

Now, don't listen to some easygoing, careless dairyman about this, but follow the teachings of the successful dairyman of to-day, and you will be surprised at how little exercise your cows need if properly taken care of otherwise. Keep the stables clean and the cows well bedded, card them every day and do not allow a particle of manure left on them. Milk them at regular times, having each milker milk the same cows each time. Allow no loud talking or other noise during milking time. The cows coming fresh in the fall, and well fed will give a good flow of milk all winter, and on getting out to grass in the spring will give nearly as much as though fresh in the month of March.

4. Handling the Product of the Dairy.—Although this part of the subject comes last in this article, it by no means should be thought of the least importance; indeed, upon this depends the financial success of the business. A good deal depends on how you dispose of your product, but in either the retail milk trade, patronizing cheese factories, or home butter making, offer nothing for sale unless it is of the best. The cows should be carefully brushed before milking, and the hands of the milker kept perfectly dry during the operation. As we use a creamery and make butter, I shall confine myself to that method. Use tin pails for milking, great care being taken to thoroughly scald and clean them. Do not let them stand in the stable after being filled, but strain the milk as soon as you get enough to fill a can in the creamer. We strain our milk through four thicknesses of cloth, aside from the strainer on the pail. This keeps out every hair if some should get in the milk. The milk being quickly strained will have a temperature of about 98 degrees and should be set in a temperature of 42 degrees in order to get the best results. After setting twelve hours the cream will be all up, when it should be skimmed. Keep the cream pail in a cool place and stir up every time you add fresh cream. When you have enough to churn, or at least every three days, place your cream pail in a room with a temperature of about 65 or 70 degrees, and stir occasionally that it may ripen its contents evenly. As soon as the cream assumes a thickened, velvety appearance it is ready to churn, and should be churned in summer at 58 degrees to 60 degrees, and in winter at 65 degrees to 68 degrees. We use the barrel churns and believe they are as good as any. Do not fill your churn too full, one-third full is about right. Turn the churn about 45 revolutions a minute, not forgetting to air the cream once or twice when first commencing. If everything is all right in about twenty or thirty minutes the glass will become clear. Then churn slowly until the granules of butter are distinct and about the size of wheat kernels. Add cool water at about 55 degrees, so the granules will harden slightly, and then draw off the buttermilk. Wash until the water runs from the churn perfectly clear. Salt in the churn with the best salt to be obtained, and to suit the taste of your market. After standing a short time work slightly and pack. Use the package which your trade demands; in fact, please your customers. Use parchment paper for covering, and, if packing in tubs, line them with the same. If the above directions are followed you will never have any trouble with unruly churnings and will have an article which will always sell at a good price. Stamp your name and address on each package.—Practical Farmer.

Combined Pen and Coop.

Marie A. Rigg, Marshalltown, Ia., writes Orange Judd Farmer: I raise a few chickens each year for home use and market. I find it costs me about $5.00 per hundred to raise them for friers. We have no market for broilers. I usually get $25.00 per hundred for them when 12 to 14 weeks old. I have, but little loss from eggs not hatching, or from chicks dying. In 1889 I set 630 eggs and took off 602 chicks of which I raised 543. I have had as good success since but not on so large a scale. My chickens are mixed Cochins and Plymouth Rocks. I always use the old-fashioned A-shaped coops. An arrangement which I have used for a number of years is shown in the illustration. It is especially adapted for the use of hens with chicks. The coop proper which stands on the right is made perfectly tight with the exception of one end. The lower two-thirds of this is slatted and contains a slat door. This coop is intended for the hen and her brood at night or during wet days. A pen which will allow the hen considerable exercise and sunshine on pleasant days is shown adjoining the coop. The three pieces running horizontally are three feet long and two inches square. It is slatted with common lath placed far enough apart to allow the chicks to get out of the pen. Only one end of the pen is closed, the other being placed over the door of the larger coop. The pen and coop are fastened together by means of small chains. Set the coop upon wide boards and have it so situated that the pen will cover a nice grass plot. A number of these pens will be found handy as they can be joined to almost any small coop.



Chicken-Coop and Pen.

Bran and Oats.

Some one asked Prof. Henry recently to give the feeding value of bran compared with oats, and he replied as follows in the Breeders' Gazette:

"An experiment in feeding oats vs. bran to dairy cows at this station by Prof. Woll showed about 10 per cent in favor of the oats. I think our farmers will find that for many purposes bran is a cheaper feed than oats at the prices both usually command in the market. Oats are such a safe and satisfactory feed for horses that they have come into general use for this purpose and command a relatively high price for the nutriment they contain. On the other hand, the manufacture of flour is so large in some centers that the by-product bran goes onto the market in enormous quantities to be sold for what the market will pay. At this station we feed bran and oats mixed to our horses generally as a substitute for oats, finding the combination a cheaper feed. Our teams do regular farm work with rarely an animal in any way out of condition. Companies employing numbers of horses for city purposes are coming to make extensive use of bran and shorts. While oats are the best all-round feed for horses, and are a splendid feed for dairy cows, I think in the West bran is often the cheaper feed."

Poultry Pickings.

There is no idle season in poultry raising.

Do away with all of the unprofitable fowls.

Spanish and leghorns are the best foragers.

The eggs from fifty hens will pay for keeping them.

Milk and wheat make a good feed for young chickens.

Money can often be made by feeding cheap wheat to poultry.

REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA.

The Transvaal and Its Wonderful Development in the Past Five Years.

The territory comprising the Transvaal or South African Republic covers an area larger than that of France. It is peopled by the Boers, who fled from the tyrannical form of government which the English sought to impose upon them further south. The Boers are the descendants of the sturdy Netherlanders, who constituted Holland a republic and a formidable power in the sixteenth century, and of the Hugenots, who were driven from France by the edict of Nantes in 1685 by Louis XIV. Thus in the Boers of South Africa there is a combination of the characteristics of two people who are conspicuous in European history for the struggles they waged for political and religious liberty. Since the days when the first band of hardy immigrant Boers crossed the Vaal river, where England's tyranny stopped at following them, and planted their cabins on the broad and sunny slopes of the Transvaal, the country has gone through the changes and throes which mark the life of individual and nation alike. Within the past five years a marvelous development of population, resourses and industries has followed on the success which gold mining has achieved. Railway communication now connects Johannesburg via the diamond mines of Kimberly with the Cape of Good Hope, a distance of 945 miles. Other connections are rapidly progressing from Natal and Delagoa bay, centralizing at Pretoria, the capital and seat of government in the Transvaal.

The constitution of the South African republic, says Goldthwaite's Magazine, is based on the Roman Dutch. The legislative power is vested in the volksraad, and the members of which are elected by their constituents for four years. The elective constituents of the president, elected for five years by a general election throughout the state, the state secretary elected by the volksraad for four years, and four unofficial members chosen for three years by the volksraad. The chief officer in each district is the landdorst, who acts as magistrate and civil commissioner, with the assistance of a clerk, who is at the same time public prosecutor and distributor of stamps. Each district is further provided with a baljuw or sheriff, gaoler and a staff of constables. With the exception of a corps of mounted artillery and police, commanded by three officers with about sixty men, the republic has no armed force. The president, with the concurrence of the executive, has the right to declare war and call up a commando, in which the burghers are placed under the field cornets and commandants of each district. The whole force is commanded by the commandant general, who is elected by the country for the term of ten years. All inhabitants of the state between sixteen and sixty years of age, not exempt according to law, are liable to service on commando. President Kruger is now occupying his office for the third term. He is a patriot, a man whose heroic life posterity will honor. Among the Boers he is known exclusively as "Oom Paul," "Uncle Paul." Though a man of rugged exterior, untutored even as regards the most elementary branches of education, he has shown a practical capacity for government that has been a match for the most finished diplomacy and statecraft. For the conservation of the interests of the mining classes, almost entirely English, he influenced the volksraad to establish a second chamber, to which they could send their representatives. This chamber legislates in the interest of the English class and for the local interests of the country, the volksraad holding the right of veto over its proceedings.

LIVELY HUSTLING FOR BUSINESS.

A Low-Down Trick Played on Three Western Railroad Passenger Agents.

The travelling passenger agents employed by the Western railroads are "hustlers" that it would be hard to duplicate, says the Atchison Champion. When any business gets away from them it is not because they have overlooked it. They can scent a good thing as far as a tramp can a free lunch. One of the requisites of success is an ability to think and act at the same time. Three agents who figured in a renecent contest were C. H. Duxbury, of the Baltimore & Ohio; C. W. Green, of the Big Four; and E. G. Davidson, of the Erie. One day not long ago they were all in Kansas City. Trade was dull. It was so dull that the three men began smoking together and had become almost sociable when Davidson received a dispatch from the Rock Island agent at Lincoln, Neb., reading: "Large company here wants transportation East. Big thing. Nobody has seen them yet."

The recipient of that telegram made a quiet sneak over the Missouri Pacific to start for Lincoln. He had not reached the depot in Kansas City before Duxbury received a dispatch from a Union-Pacific man at Lincoln: "Come to Lincoln. Big company wants terms to go East. Davidson is on to it."

He pulled his hat over and his brow and hurried away to Lincoln. A dispatch about this time from the Northwestern man at Lincoln was handed to Green reading: "Big company here wants terms East. Duxbury and Davidson are both chasing it."

Green boarded a Rock Island train for Lincoln. The agents at Omaha wired them en route to the same effect. But before they neared Lincoln the trio were telegraphed from a half-dozen sources that the company was at Omaha. It seemed all the railroad men west of the Mississippi were in the deal to help them along. They changed their routes and reached Omaha. There all the railroad men were full of information about the big company. They also knew when each of the three agents reached Omaha, where they were stopping, and posted each against the other. They then informed them all about the same time that the party had gone to Council Bluffs, and they gave the street address in that city where they could be found. The agents took a carriage each, gave the address to the driver with a persuasive coin for fast driving and thought joyfully over the outlook that the lively chase would soon be ended, and each particular one believed he would be a winner. Three carriages with foaming steeds under whirling lash came galloping up and met at the address given—the camp of Kelly's army of the commonweal.

Landlord Benzie, of the Great Northern Hotel, Thief River Falls, was in town on Monday.

E, T, Spafford, of Thompson N. D., was in town last Monday looking over his business interests.

Messrs, Shuster and White, of Thief River Falls, was in town Monday on their way to Crookston.

Today is decoration day but the only indication of a holiday here is that the school children have a holiday.

Spring work is about over and farmers are more numerous in town, consequently business is much better.

Leonard Holmes is doing good work planting trees on his lots, putting up a woven wire fence and making other improvements.

Bennett Malberg, of excel, was in town last Thursday. We understand that Bennet will be a candidate for clerk of court of Marshall county.

E. H. Stranahan came up last Friday and spent Sunday at home, He is doing very well in his new position and gives promise of making a first class salesman,

Peter Lindbloom appeared before Justice Peters last Saturday morning charged with being drunk. Five dollars and costs said the Justice and Peter liquidated and left.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E Church will give a strawberry and ice cream social in the church, Wednesday evening June 6th. A musical and literary program is being prepared and all are invited to attend.

Swan Anderson, of Black River, was in town yesterday. Swan has been prominently mentioned for the Peoples party nomination for county commissioner and is receiving considerable support from friends throughout the district.

District court is in session at Crookston this week. It will last until June 18 This seems to be a very peaceable community and few from here are in attendance, Judge Spendley, of Crookston, died last Monday after a short illness. He was one of the first settlers in Polk county having been in Crookston for the past twenty-two years.

Word was received here last Friday that Miss Esther Holmes had died on Tuesday evening of consumption at her home in Goodhue county. Miss Holmes was well known here having frequently visited her sister Mrs. C. G. Rapp. She had many warm friends here who will sincerely mourn her sudden death.

Lars J, Wickstrom, of Rocksbury township was fatally kicked by his team while unhitching his horses at his home a week ago last Tuesday, Doctors were called but nothing could be done and he died Thursday morning. Deceased was a native of Sweden and was forty-seven years of age. He took his farm in 1883 and has lived there ever since, He was one of the most prosperous and influential farmers of the township and his sudden death was a surprise and shock to a large circle of friends. The funeral took place last Monday the interment being made in the Swedish cemetery east of here.

Minnesota ranks twentieth in the list of states in population, twelfth in education, fourteenth in charity and nineteenth in reformatory institutions. New York stands highest in all these respects while Nevada brings up the rear, a rotten borough, least in all matters concerning the well being of mankind.—Globe.

Caspar Falk, of Thief River Falls, was in town Monday on his way to Crookston to attend the session of the district court. Mr Falk intends to leave for Norway about June 10th to visit his parents. He has been away for over twelve years and intends to spend several months visiting friends and relatives.

A meeting of between 5,000 and 6,000 un-employed working men was held in Minneapolis last Saturday and was addressed by editor Owen and others The condition of the laboring classes in the large cities is truly deplorable, and unless the times change for the better soon, and work be provided for these men, that they may earn enough to keep themselves and families, there will be terrible times in the United States next winter, and the Coxey movement is but a forerunner to a mighty industrial revolution.—Warren Sheaf,

A story comes from New York to the effect that little Ruth Cleveland, the president's eldest child, will be a deaf mute—that her hearing is so defective that she cannot develop ability to talk. It is also said that she is mentally weak While of course such an affliction in a president's family is a no more sorrowful thing, so far as the parents are concerned, than is suffered in many families—still the general public will feel a very profound regret that Mr, and Mrs, Cleveland are called to endure such a cloud upon their domestic happiness. —Grand Forks Herald.

The power of the democratic party in this nation today is as absolute as is that of the Czar in Russia. The party has both branches of congress and the executive. It has full power to enact any legislative reform it desires. Yet the burdens of the people increase and the promised reforms of democracy are not forthcoming, Why? Because the power behind the throne is the same power that controls the Republican machine—the gold power. When people take the government into their own hands and bury both the old parties too deep for resurrection, then and then only will justice be done.

A circular issued by Warden Wolfer, of Stillwater, regarding the purchase of prison binding twine, says:

"We cannot give away the state's property, nor can we ship to irresponsible persons." We are willing to sell the twine on three month's time or until harvest without interest. We would want to know, however, that it would be paid for. This could be done by sending us notes of farmers indorsed by the nearest bank or good merchantable paper; or by giving any other security of a satisfactory nature. Farmers in a given neighborhood could make joint notes certified by the local bank. We are willing to do anything we can consistently with the safety of the state's property,"

Washington May 24.—Maj. Baldwin made another ineffectual attempt today to secure unanimous consent for the consideration of his bill providing for the disposition of the Chippewa pine land in 100,000 acre lots. He thinks tomorrow he will be able to get it through. Upon further examination of the Nelson act of 1889 he finds the bill which he proposes to introduce to provide for throwing open the agricultural lands in the same manner is unnecessary. That act says that the secretary of the interior may open the agricultural lands to homestead entry as fast as it is surveyed. The only thing necessary to get them on the market is to hasten the surveys. Mr. Baldwin does intend, however, to introduce a bill at once increasing the size of the allotments to heads of families from eighty to 160 acres. This is a point the Red Lake Indians are very strenuous about and Mr. Baldwin's view is that inasmuch as the land all belongs to them there is no reason why they should not be gratified.

Fire was discovered in S. M, Dainard's barn last Thursday afternoon about 2 p. m, The barn was partly filled with hay and the fire spread rapidly and the horses, a buggy and a cutter were the only things saved, In a very short time Christ Sandmoen's barn also caught and the two barns made an extremely hot fire. For a time it looked as though the Morse and Berg dwellings would also go. On the last side the, hardest fight was had to save Dainard's dwelling. An ice house a few feet from the building was almost consumed before it was put out by hard work. It looked hard for the whole row for a while and the furniture was moved out of both Dainard's and and Jackson's dwellings. Dainard's loss will be about a thousand dollars and Sandmoen's will lose about three hundred dollars without any insurance. Dainard's barn was insured in the Phoenix for $500. The origin of the fire is not known.

Peoples Party Co. Convention.

Pursuant to the resolutions of the peoples party county central committee of Polk county Minnesota, notice is hereby given that a county convention of the of the peoples party of said county will be held at the court house in the city of Crookston in said county on the 28th day of June 1894 at 10 o'clock a. m. to place in nomination candidates for the following offices viz: County auditor, treasurer, sheriff, register of deeds, county attorney, clerk of court, judge of probate, superintendent of schools, county surveyor, court commissioner, and county commissioners for the second and fourth commissioners districts and to elect delegates to the state convention of the peoples party to be held at Minneapolis Minnesota on or about the 10th day of July 1894 and to elect delegates to the peoples party congressional convention in and for the 7th congressional district of Minnesota, and to the peoples party legislative convention in and for the 51st legislative district of Minnesota which two last conventions are hereafter to be called; and to appoint a new peoples party county committee and to transact such other business as may properly come before the convention.

The basis of representation will be one delegate for each election precinct in said county and one delegate for fifty votes or major fraction thereof cast for Ignatius Donnelly for governor at the general election in 1892. The several towns and villages in this vicinity are entitled to the following number of delegates in said convention viz:

Black River	1
Brey	1
Emardville	1
Gervais	2
Jordan	2
North	2
[illegible]dal	1
Polk Center	1
River Falls	2
Rocksbury	2
St. Hilaire	1
Sanders	2
Wyandotte	1

The total vote in the county will be 124.

The towns and villages which may have been detatched from other towns since the last general election will vote with the towns from which they were detatched in the election of delegates. We would urge the populists of each town to see that their town is represented at the convention with the full number of delegates to which it is entitled. Proxies will not be recognized except where the delegate and his proxie both are legal voters residing in the same town or election precinct. The committees of the several towns, cities and villages are requested to give public notice of the time when and the place where the caucuses are to be held for the election of delegates by posting at least three notices thereof in three of the most public places in the precinct at least ten days before the caucus is to be held

At the several caucuses in each town or ward the voters present shall elect a peoples party town or ward committee of three members and report their names and post office address to the chairman of the county committee. Only legal voters who believe in the principles and the platform of the peoples party both state and national, and who agree to vote for the peoples party candidates that may be nominated by the several people party convention are eligable to vote in the caucus or to be elected delegates.

Dated this 14th day May 1894.

Now after hundreds of millions have been expended in building gigantic modern war ships, the question is being quite universally asked, are they good for anything? And the fear is quite as universal that they are not. The new type of ship has never been tried in war, but judging from the ease with which some of the largest strongest and costliest ones have been sunk by collision or foundered at sea they have less to fear from an enemy than from their own unseaworthyness and frailty. It is surely time to stop wasting money on the great hulks of iron and steel until actual test has demonstrated their value How would it do to man the best English war ship with British gold bugs and the best American one with American monopolists and pit them against each other in a real sea fight? It might be hard on the g. b.'s and the m.'s, but it would enable us to know "where we are at" in the building of costly navies. —F. S. & H,

The postoffice department has ordered the use of postal notes discontinued after July 1st. A new series of domestic money orders will take the place of the postal notes. All offices will be called money order offices but the smaller ones will be designated as 'limited money order offices.' The change is made pursuant to an act of congress of last January and is expected to do away with the negotiable feature of the postal note system and thus make it harder to perpetrate frauds.—Crookston Times,

THE MATINEE HAT.

[By one who has sat behind it.]

It may alter in fashion and vary in shape,
But I never am able from it to escape.
Whenever a matinee seat I engage,
It is sure to cut off all my view of the stage;
Whoever the actors, whatever the play,
I find it provokingly stuck in my way.
If I sit in the stalls, it's in front of me there;
If I try the dress circle, no better I fare;
Or up stairs and down stairs, at this house or that,
I am haunted, alack! by the matinee hat.

'Tis in vain that my head and my shoulders I skew,
For that hat and the head underneath it skew too.
'Tis in vain to the right or the left that I lean,
That hat, leaning also, still cuts off the scene.
If, by dint of an effort, my neck I should crane,
That hat has the power greater height to attain.
Whilst a chignon profuse and "puff shoulders," like wings,
Still further embarrass my view of stage things,
Till I cannot conceive what the actors are at
From the glimpses I get through the matinee hat.

When the hero kneels down and the heroine sobs,
A cockatoo feather in front of me bobs.
When the virtuous peasant's distress is most dire,
All I see is a butterfly wabbling on wire;
When the villain crawls down to the footlights to die,
The point of a hat pin is jabbed in my eye,
Whilst the view of the great situation I get
Is masked by a bird's nest bespangled with jet,
And the biggest sensations fall tediously flat
As seen from the rear of the matinee hat.

—London Truth.

To the Death.

A Woodward avenue car stopped at Duffield street to let a lady wearing a spring hat alight. At the same moment a lady wearing her winter hat wanted to take the same car. They met face to face on the lower step. They were strangers. The one with the spring hat had the right of way, and she tossed her head in a defiant manner. Winter hat felt that the odds were against her, but she braced up and looked the other square in the eye and refused to give way.

"All out!" shouted the conductor on reaching for the bellrope, but spring hat would not budge, and winter hat would not retreat.

"All aboard!"

But spring hat glared at winter hat, and the end of her nose was elevated a bit. Winter hat returned the glare, and her pug nose tried the same dodge, but couldn't elevate.

"Ladies, don't detain the car," cried the conductor, and his words encouraged winter hat to renewed exertions. She pulled herself on the step, crowded spring hat against the side of the car and entered the door with a smile of triumph on her face. The other stepped off, gave her skirts a shake and her head a toss and walked away, but despite her dignity and defiance the conductor looked after her and said:

"Finest spring hat on this whole line, but the lady inside takes the gate receipts."—Detroit Free Press.

Got Them Mixed.

"Out in Missouri," says a western congressman, "they tell a good story on Senator David R. Atchison, who had the honor to be president for the duration of one Sunday by virtue of his position as president pro tempore of the senate. There was a good deal of discussion about bringing Kossuth to this country and much talk about the great Magyar. A bill had been introduced in congress to defray his expenses and was then before the senate. The word Magyar was dingling in everybody's ears, and it had not escaped the attention of Senator Atchison, though he didn't know what it meant at that time. There was talk one day in the cloakrooms about the 'Magyar' and the propriety of voting for a bill to pay his expenses, no one denying that he was a great orator and a friend of this country.

"'Well,' said Senator Atchison, after a short reflection, 'if, as I take it, from his name, he is related to the Maguires of Kentucky, he is a good fellow, and I shall vote for the bill.'

"There was some secret smiling, but no one dared to correct the senator, and as soon as they could make their escape that crowd of senators went into the chamber to have out their laugh over Atchison's mistake in confounding the word Magyar with Maguire."—New York Tribune.

A Sad Plight.

A very diffident young man, who is struggling with his first faint signs of a mustache and lovesickness, went down to the quiet little village of Berlin, on the Camden and Atlantic railroad, on Sunday. His visit to a certain fair one was so pleasant that the evening hours wore away with astonishing rapidity. He came to his senses at an hour long past the movement of the last train for the city. The fair one's family made him comfortable for the night, and he passed into dreamland full of happiness.

When the family awoke the next morning, it was thrown into consternation. Burglars had invaded the house during the night and carried off a lot of things. The diffident young man was awakened by the confusion, and vainly he searched for his trousers. Cold perspiration broke out upon him, and he sat down upon the bed and wailed inwardly. He managed to acquaint his sweetheart's relatives of his predicament, but as paterfamilias was the only man in the family, and he weighs close to 300 pounds, the trouble was only accentuated. There is not a pair of trousers on sale in Berlin, and the unfortunate lovelorn youth was compelled to remain a prisoner in his room while his sweetheart came to the city, got a pair of trousers at his home and took them down at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.—Philadelphia Record.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.

Mr. Jimsmith Was Prepared For a Different Individual.

Mr. Jimsmith, the lawyer, whose name is a household word in Chicago, recently moved into a beautiful suburban home. He is highly pleased with it in a general way, but so many agents call upon him that he finds it rather a bore. The other day he opened the door to 12 agents before the afternoon was half over, and when he was summoned to the door for the thirteenth time he was mad enough to fight a herd of porcupines. A tall, sad eyed man dressed in black confronted him and started to say something, but Mr. Jimsmith interrupted him:

"You don't need to tell me what you have to sell, because I don't want it. I don't need a burglar proof clock, nor a bootjack that has a music box in it, nor a stemwinding can opener. I don't"——

"My dear sir, you are mis"——

"Oh, you don't need to 'dear sir' me! It won't work. I tell you I don't want a gate that may be taken from its hinges and used as a folding bed. I have no use for a combined currycomb and mustache cup. I have a full supply of furniture polish, cough medicine and hair restorer, and, what's more, my wife doesn't need a recipe for preserving codfish or frying billiard balls."

"Really, sir, this is a most extraordinary"——

"Oh, of course, it's extraordinary, but I don't want it. I suppose it can be used to grate horseradish and tune the piano, but I tell you that I don't need it. Perhaps it will take the grease spots out of clothing, pare apples and chase dogs out of the yard, but you'll have to go somewhere else to sell it. I am surprised that a man of your age and respectable appearance should go around trying to sell pocket cornshellers when the whole neighborhood is full of wood that ought to be sawed. What's the use of trying to sell a [illegible] fire escape when you can make $1 a day baling hay?

"I am not an agent."

"Then what are you?"

"I'm the pastor of the Orthodox Brethren church, and I came over to get acquainted, not knowing that you were running a private madhouse. Good day."—Chicago Tribune.

The other day there was a little girl added to the family. The boy is not a lover of babies, but he does of dogs. The next day after the birth the boy began to wonder what his parents wanted of another baby, and if they had to have something new in the house why they didn't get a pup. That night he climbed on his father's knee and asked:

"Do babies cost much?"

"Well, quite a good deal," replied the head of the household.

"Do they cost more than $5?"

"Yes. They generally cost a great deal more than that."

"Did my little sister cost as much as $5?"

"Yes, she cost ten times as much as that. Don't you think she is worth more than $50?" said the proud father.

"Shucks, no!" exclaimed the future [illegible]. "Why, that baby can't do anything but cry. Can't hardly kick. Now, I know a fellow that's got the best kind of pup, and you can get him for $5. Now, if you wanted to make a good investment for me and something that I could use, why didn't you save $5 and buy me the pup?"—St. Louis Republic.

THE CHIEF EVIL.

Who lets mad passion
His acts control;
Doth thereby fashion
A ruined soul.

For every mortal
Himself, alas!
Set wide the Portals
Where he will pass.

As sight and blindness
Are far apart,
So wrath and kindness
Affect the heart.

One leads to sadness
And loss and pain,
And one to gladness
And good and gain.

Surely, the devil
Appraiseth still,
As his chief evil,
Man's own self-will.

LIGHLY'S SUCCESS.

How he Combined Hypnotism and Literature, but Overshot the Mark.

When I went into the club the other night, I found Lightly turning over the pages of a Christmas number of All the World. His face would have afforded a fine study for a picture of contentment, and my first thought was that he must have an article or story in the magazine. For Lightly is something of a writer, and whenever he gets anything published—which is not very often—he bores us all for weeks afterward, telling how it happened.

As soon as he caught sight of me, he beckoned me to his table, and I thought that I was in for at least a half-hour's punishment. But it turned out for once that I was interested in his talk.

"Have you seen it?" he asked, tapping the cover of the magazine and giving a little eager laugh as he spoke, which confirmed my impression that he must be in luck.

"No," I answered; "have you anything in it?"

"Anything?" he almost shouted. "Why, man, I wrote the whole number."

At this I began to wonder if his brain—never too strong—had not suddenly given way. As you well know, All the World is one of the most conservative periodicals—as I will admit that I have found to my sorrow in the past—and it was preposterous that it should make up the whole number, and a Christmas number at that, from the work of one man. And it was clear to my mind that Lightly would not have been that one man, in any event.

While trying to think of something quieting to say, I took the magazine and glanced over the table of contents. It was one of Lightly's fancies—which did him no good in a literary way—to have a dozen or more pen names. He used these indiscriminately, as the humor moved him, and it happened that I knew most of them. So you may judge of my surprise when I tell you that every poem, story, article, and essay in the entire magazine was signed by some one of the many names that I knew he used. The first was a Christmas poem, signed G. O. Lightly. Then a Christmas story, signed T. S. Weaver (this, he had once explained to me, stood for The Story Weaver.) Then an article on "Jerusalem—Nineteen Hundred Years Ago," "Christmas—Past and Present;" and the usual run of such material as editors have fallen into the habit of serving up for the holiday issue. None of the topics were new, nor, so far as I could discover in a hasty glance, were they treated with much brilliancy. The signatures were all composed upon the same puerile plan as the one I have given.

Poor as much of the stuff probably was, I still could not believe that Lightly had written all, much less secured its publication in a single number of All the World. I turned to him for an explanation.

"Draw up a chair," he said, with what I thought an air of some condescension. "I can afford to fly high tonight, so let us have a bird and a bottle quietly in this corner while I tell you all about it.

"Of course," he said, as soon as we were fairly settled, "this is all on the quiet. I should not tell even you, if you were not one of my best friends, and if I did not mean presently to ask a favor of you. You know," he continued, "how people have been talking about the science of hypnotism for months past?"

I nodded my assent, and he went on with an uninterrupted flow of words:

"Well," he said, "I chanced some time ago to be thrown in contact with an adept in this art, or science, or whatever you are minded to call it. I recognized at once the value that a knowledge of it might be to me in making fiction, and I asked the fellow to give me some insight into it. This he did, for a consideration, and to such good purpose that I was soon able to practice the science to some extent. I presently found that it was not difficult for me to gain a hypnotic influence over any man of less robust physique than myself, but I rarely attempted to use the power.

"When I finally did, it was wholly without premeditation, and it happened in this way. A few weeks ago—in fact, just as they were making up the Christmas number—I happened into the office of All the World, and while there offered Aldeson this poem." Lightly put his finger on the printed page as he spoke, but went on without pause.

"Aldeson put me off with some stock remark about being full of material, of having more than he could handle, and did not even look at the poem. This nettled me considerably, and it suddenly occurred to me that Aldeson was a smaller man than myself, and that I ought to give him a good thrashing for his impudence. Then it came to me all at once that I could hypnotize him and make him accept my poem. I asked him to send his assistant away, as I wanted to speak to him privately. When we were alone, I at once began the effort to make him subject to my will. In less time than I am telling you, I had him completely under my influence, and he had accepted the poem and promised it the initial place in the number.

"Then the thought came to me to try my power a little farther. Calling a messenger, I sent to my rooms for a bundle of manuscript, and sorted out from it everything that would do for a Christmas number. You know," he added, parenthetically, "that I always keep a stock of material on hand, ready for all needs and seasons. I took these Christmas things up, one by one, and brought them to his attention, and he accepted each one and made a place for it in this holiday number. Then he called his assistant in and gave instructions for making up the copy—and I took him away with me and gave him a royal good time for a week. When he got back to the office it was too late to make any changes, and so you see the number has come out with nothing but my work. And a very good number it is, too," he concluded, complacently.

"But what do you expect to gain by it?" I asked; "the story will surely come out, and it will do you no good, but quite the reverse."

"You are wrong," replied Lightly, quietly; "the story will not come out. You can see that Aldeson must be the last man to tell it. And he could have no object in doing so, especially as the number has already made such a good impression."

With that he took from his pocket copies of a half-dozen leading papers and reviews and showed me comments that were not only favorable but flattering in the extreme.

"Paid for?" said I, not a little disgusted with the whole business, and particularly at being made a confidant of.

"Yes," he laughed; "but it goes just the same. And now," he added, with a slight show of hesitancy, "for the other matter."

"Go ahead," I answered, not very graciously, considering that I was dining with him; "I might as well hear it all now."

"You asked me what I expected to gain by it. You know Lettie Underwood." I started at the name, but nodded with what composure I could command. "That dear girl," said Lightly, "has promised to marry me as soon as I have won a place in literature—in fact, as soon as I have an established standing with any of the leading magazines. This settles that point." To emphasize his meaning he tapped All the World triumphantly.

"But surely," I said, "you would not consider this fair? You would not be willing that she should know—"

"All's fair in love, my boy. And I want you to be my best man."

I managed to get off with some half-promise, and then, pleading an engagement, I got out of the club as quickly as possible and into a cab, and gave the driver the number of Lettie Underwood's house.

The dear girl—I could have choked Lightly for using the words; they were in my heart whenever I thought of her, which was all the time—was at home and received me with her usual sweet welcome. But I held her at arm's length, and, with all the sternness that I could command, exclaimed:

"Lettie, you are a wretched trifler. Give me back my heart."

"What is the mater with the poor boy now?" she cooed softly.

"Matter enough. You have promised to marry Lightly."

"Yes," she laughed, "I remember. He proposed to me six months ago. I told him I would when he had made a success—"

"Your exact words," I said, severely, "were—when you have a standing with any of the leading magazines."

"Same thing," she answered, airily; "he will never achieve either. It was my way of letting him down easy."

"Lettia, listen to me," I said; "Lightly has written the entire Christmas number of All the World."

At this Letty looked at me reproachfully.

"Dick," she said, "where have you been dining?"

"No, it is not that," I protested; "I dined at the club, and Lightly told me himself, and he showed me the magazine, and asked me to be his best man, and we only had one bottle between us."

"Well, this is a scrape!" she exclaimed ruefully; "suppose I will have to keep my promise and marry him."

"And what about your promise to me?" I asked sarcastically.

"That was indefinite," she answered thoughtfully; "there was never any time set for that. So I shall have to marry him now, and if he should die, or anything happen, I could marry you afterward."

"Thanks," I replied dryly; "but that programme does not suit me. Now let me plan a little. You have been a willful creature, never ready to name the day, and see the trouble you have got into. I suppose Lightly will be here bright and early to-morrow to marry you. Now, I propose to marry you myself to-morrow at noon."

At this her eyes opened in wide protest.

"Yes," I continued, "I shall send a note to Lightly, telling him of your change of plans and asking him to be my best man."

"But, Dick, this is so sudden. What shall I live on?"

"Love, you practical girl," I cried, catching her in my arms; "besides, the publishers of All the World to-day offered me the editorship of the magazine, vice Aldeson, resigned. I suppose his going out has some connection with this business of Lightly's. I am sorry for him, but I might as well have the place as another."

"And then you can print anything of your own that you want to, can't you, dear? I am glad that you won't have to be rejected any more."

"Not even by you, sweetheart?"

"Not even by me—any more."

Do you want the finis?

We were married on the morrow, and Lettie was as pretty a bride as ever was seen—as pretty as though she had been given months, instead of hours, for making ready. But on second thought, I am not sure that she had not been making ready all the time that I had been vainly asking her to name the day. I confess that I do not understand the sex.

There was but one thing to cloud our happiness. Lightly refused to be best man, even to come to the wedding. And he has never offered any further contributions to All the World.

Perhaps this is because I am not, like Aldeson, "of a less robust physique" than himself.—Argonaut.

It Broke the Dog's Heart.

Pat Carroll, the old-time sport and handler of fighting dogs and chickens, tells a story that may be true and may not:

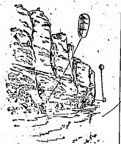
"I had a dog at one time," said Pat, "that had a favorite hold. It was the winner of twenty-two fights, and in every instance he would grab the left hind leg of his opponent and never loose his hold until the dog was beaten. His twenty-third fight, however, proved his Waterloo. I matched him against a dog that I had never seen, and when he was placed in the pit I noticed that he had only three legs, being minus his left hind member.

"I dropped my dog and encouraged him, and he immediately went for his usual hold. He made two or three attempts to grab what was left of the leg, and turned tail and came back toward me. I did what I could to encourage him to go on with the fight, but he wouldn't budge an inch, and finally he jumped the pit and ran home. For three days I tried to get him out of the house, but all he wanted to do was to lie down and moan. On the fourth day he died, and I engaged a veterinary surgeon to dissect him, and he said the dog died of a broken heart, caused by my having matched him against a dog that I had never seen and minus his left hind leg. The deception was too great on the dog, and I never made another match after that until I had seen what I was up against."—Philadelphia Call.

BALLOONS FOR WAR.

A MATTER OF INTEREST TO ARMY MEN.

Recent Advances in the Science Make Airships Valuable in Military Operations—What European Have Accomplished—United States War Balloons.



Transporting Gas Along the Coast.

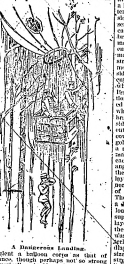
To have an effective balloon corps fully equipped and ready to take the field in case of war at a moment's notice is now regarded by all the great European powers as a matter of vital importance. Even in the United States is the question being discussed with a great deal of interest. Everything tends to show that if there is one branch of modern warfare, or, rather, perhaps, strategy, which is likely to be watched with keen interest during the next war it will be that of military ballooning. It is generally conceded that France has made the greatest strides toward perfection in this line, though the world at large has not been permitted to know the exact results of its latest experiments. There is a great deal of secrecy about the establishment of Meudon, where the government Parc d'Aerostation is situated. France has been and is spending a great deal of money in perfecting an absolutely faultless dirigible balloon, one that can be moved in any direction at the will of the aeronaut irrespective of the direction of the wind. The French experts claim that their war balloon, the "General Meusnier," attained a speed of twenty-eight miles an hour and could be guided with utmost ease to any given point. However, since no outsiders where allowed to witness the wonderful performance, it might be a trifle exaggerated.

The German emperor does not propose to let his warlike neighbor monopolize this feature of army equipment. He has just presented to the German Society for Promotion of Aerial Navigation for the advancement of this science the sum of $50,000 marks. This is to be applied for the construction and equipment of a giant balloon. This balloon will be as high as a four-story house. It will fifty-six feet in diameter and will contain not less than 2,530 cubic meters of gas. It will be made of Egyptian cotton stuff and will be coated with vulcanized gum, a substance which is considered superior to varnish.

Expect to Ascend 33,000 Feet.

A very interesting feature of this monster balloon will be the provision of a special valve of a new construction which will keep the gas pure for a longer time and thus sustain the balloon for a longer period. It is proposed to make not less than fifty journeys within a year and to ascend as high as possible. An altitude of 33,000 feet is thought to be attainable by the use of artificial respiration. More than $2,500 will be expended in purchasing scientific apparatus for this balloon, which is intended more for taking observations than for the purpose of war.

Aside from this the German army has this spring put in the field as efficient a balloon corps as that of France, though perhaps not so strong numerically. At Metz, during the late maneuvers, several successful ascensions were made which practically proved the vast advantage an army may derive from having these aerial observatories. A very interesting experiment was also made to show that the balloon can in an emergency, supply the want of bridges. A good-sized balloon was supplied with a large number of ropes dangling from its side. One of these was seized by a soldier, who was carried across the river in the twinkling of an eye. As soon as he had landed he fastened the end of a line securely, after which the balloon was hauled forward and back and in less than no time transferred a battalion from one side to another.



A Dangerous Landing.

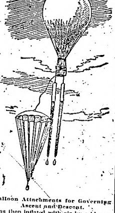
A new air torpedo, to be used in balloon warfare, is the invention of a Frenchman, who has disposed of his patent to the Russian government. The inventor claims to be able to direct this with as much accuracy as that of a submarine torpedo. It has a carrying capacity of nearly 1,000 pounds of explosives. The discharging of these can be made without subjecting the attacking party to any risks, owing to the remarkable gliding power of this aerial cruiser, which is to strike and glide away with marvelous rapidity either as it emerges from the clouds or springs unseen above the smoke of battle to let fall its missiles of destruction when least expected. No public experiments have as yet been made with this flying torpedo, which if it is all that the inventor claims, will prove a most dangerous power of destruction. However, until a practical test has been made no one can judge of its merits.

War Balloons for The American Army.

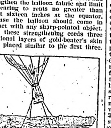
In building the war balloon "General Myer" for the signal corps of the United States army the first real step was taken by the military officials of this country to advance with the great powers of Europe in this line of military work. It is modeled after both the French and English military balloons and in mechanical details embodies the best features of each. It resembles the English in the similarity of material from which the envelope is made. The system of inflation is also like that of the English, the hydrogen being stored under pressure within steel cylinders. In the plan of its suspension gear it is after the French models.

The envelope of the "General Myer" is spherical in shape, with a capacity of 13,000 cubic feet, corresponding with the ordinary balloon used abroad for captive ascensions, and having a lifting power sufficient to carry two men with the necessary signal instruments. The envelope is formed of gold beaters' skin, which is especially adapted to this purpose, as it is impervious to the hydrogen gas and is very light. The membranes from which this fabric, gold-beaters' skin, is formed are taken from the entrails of the bullock, each animal furnishing one. When stretched they are from eighteen to twenty-four inches long and ten to sixteen inches wide. After taking the membranes from the slaughtered bullock they are first scraped from the fat and soft parts and salted till needed for use. After taking them from the salt they are first culled, washed and soaked in fresh water till the salt is taken out. Then a day or two before using they are placed in a vessel containing soft water, in which has been dissolved some fish glue, which adds to their adhering qualities when making the fabric of the envelope.

In making the envelope, says a correspondent in the Aeronautics, a cotton model balloon with a neck was made of the same size as the General Myer and its surface oiled. This cotton bag was then inflated with air by a blower and the neck securely fastened so as to retain the air. The model was kept in a state of tension by applying the blower from time to time as the air under pressure within leaked through. The model thus fully inflated was suspended by ropes attached to the neck and to the top or opposite hole. This suspension permitted the balloon model to be turned as upon an axis, and thus brought every part of its surface in rotation within easy reach of the operator. A scaffold framework, having a height nearly equal to the semidiameter of the model, was placed around one side, or semicircumference, thus presenting to the workmen a nearly vertical surface on which to lay the membranes. The nice task of placing the membranes forming the fabric of the envelope was done by women. Each membrane was taken from the water, stretched out upon the surface of the model, smoothed down by hand, and sides or ends, where irregular, were cut off by a pair of blunt-pointed shears which the women used most deftly. Being wet and charged with the solution of fish glue the membranes stretched taut over the surface and adhered while damp to the model. The membranes in this way were placed side by side, the edges overlapping, until the entire surface of the balloon model was covered with one coherent layer of the gold-beater's skin. Over this first layer a second and third were put, in like manner, except that the membranes in each alternate were placed at right angles to the longitudinal direction of the preceding series. Over the third layer were placed, from the top to the neck, long ribbons about an inch wide, of the same material, laid in lattice. These ribbons were made by stretching a layer of gold-beater's skin upon a long and smooth oiled board, and superimposing thereon five additional layers successively, and after drying, the fabric, which resembled parchment, was cut into narrow strips. These interlacing ribbons, or cords, appear as diamond-shaped figures, increasing in size from each pole to the equator, and strengthen the balloon fabric and limit its tearing to rents no greater than about sixteen inches at the equator, in case the balloon should come in contact with any sharp-pointed object. Over these strengthening cords three additional layers of gold-beater's skin were placed similar to the first three.



Balloon Attachments for Governing Ascent and Descent.



Using Balloons for Crossing Rivers.

Around the top and about the neck an additional layer was placed to further strengthen these parts, where the strain is great. After the fabric was thus completed the air was pumped out of the model the neck of the cotton bag was separated from that of the outside fabric and air was blown into the true balloon envelope between the skins and the cotton material, gently separating the skins from the oiled surface of the cotton model and permitting the latter to be pulled out through the neck of the balloon proper. There remained a translucent globe, which, except for the latticed ribbons in diamond-shaped figures, appeared homogeneous throughout, not the line of a joint or lap of the thousands of pieces of which it was formed showing.

In the top of the balloon envelope was now cut a circular opening about the air. The only thing needed just now to show what can be done with these much-talked-of war balloons is to start a first-class continental war.

18 inches in diameter, into which the valve ring or thimble was inserted and seized, and into the thimble was secured the valve. The envelope of the balloon being complete, it was placed within the netting, the top of which was secured about the valve ring, and upon ropes being attached to the ring the balloon and netting were hoisted, air was again blown into the balloon and the netting adjusted. After this the balloon was hoisted higher and the suspension gear, with basket, was attached, after which came the captive gear—that is, the cable which holds the balloon when it ascends. All was perfect and the "General Myer" was ready for use.

How the Cable Is Made.

The cable serving to hold the balloon captive is made of several strands of steel wire, having in its center an insulated wire for telephonic work, the outside strands acting as return wires. The balloon, with complete equipment, is now at Fort Riley, Kan., school of instruction, where it is being used in instructing the signal corps at that post. It has been pronounced by experts as a masterpiece in military balloon building.

This is not the first time the United States army has made use of balloons. During the civil war the federal government recognized their value for making observations. In the month of September, 1861, one of the most daring aeronauts, La Mountaine, furnished important information to Gen. McClellan. His balloon rose from the northern camp of the Potomac and passed above Washington. The ropes were then cut and La Mountaine rose to the height of a mile and a half and found himself directly over the lines of the enemy. There he was able to perfectly observe their position and movements. When he had made his observations he threw out ballast and rose to a height of three miles, when an air current carried him in the direction of Maryland, where he descended in safety. Gen. McClellan was so well satisfied with the observations taken that through his influence the war department received orders causing more balloons to be provided.

The use of balloons, however, was discontinued for many years, but now it is believed they will be given a permanent place in the equipment of all armies. The science of aeronautics has so advanced, new features being constantly added, that it is hard to disbelieve anything claimed by the enthusiasts in this line. The chances are that we will dispense entirely with ordinary fleets and do our fighting in

The Dog on Guard.

One of the postoffice officials of Boston is the owner of a bulldog that he would not part with under any circumstances. This dog considers it his special duty to ride to and from the depot and postoffice on the mail wagon and keep guard of the mail sacks, says the Globe. He has followed this custom for a number of years. One night after the unloading of the mail car he started to ride, as usual, on the bags in the wagon, but when the postoffice was reached he was not on board. This was strange, for heretofore no temptation had ever been strong enough to lure him from his post. The sacks were delivered, and as the man called them over one was found to be missing. The wagon driver hurried back to look along the streets. After searching over a good part of the route he suddenly discovered the dog sitting in the gutter wagging his tail, and evidently overjoyed at being recognized. On going up to him the driver found the dog sitting on the lost mail sack. He had evidently noticed it when it fell from the wagon and had immediately jumped off and stood guard over it.

Cow on a Church Roof.

The conquering of the cactus in a little Mexican town on the south bank of the Rio Grande furnished a gentleman of Dallas, Tex., with inspiration for the following: "In this particular town there was a good-sized church with a flat roof. A large number of cactus seeds had lodged in the moss on the roof of the church, and in the course of time there was a big crop of cactus up there. Now, it is the custom when they want to destroy this thing to first burn off all the horns and then the cattle will eat the plant. The people became tired of seeing plants on their church, and a mass meeting was called to devise some means of getting rid of the things. After deliberating for some time a man was hoisted to the roof, and, after three days' labor, had burned the thorns from all the stalks. A cow was then hoisted to the roof, and in about a week there was nothing left on the roof but the cow, which was lowered to the earth again. The people were delighted with the result, and now point with pride to their church.

Worry and Indigestion.

Worry is a baneful curse and source of untold evils. It seams the face with lines and furrows and has a most depressing effect upon that hyper-sensitive organ, the stomach, which at such times becomes a most unwilling and laggard servant. Indeed, it is safe to say unless encouraged by a cheerful temper and bright, or at least hopeful, thoughts, the stomach will play truant or sulk and do no work, which it can shrink. The physiological explanation of this is the close alliance of the great sympathetic nerves, which are worse than the telegraph for carrying bad news; the worry and anxiety which depress the brain produce simultaneously a semi-paralysis of the nerves of the stomach, gastric juices will not flow and—presto! there is indigestion. One sign of mental health is serenity of temper and a self-control that enables us to bear with equanimity and unruffled temper the petty trials and jars of life, especially those arising from contact with scolding, irascible, irritating folk. It is well to remember at such times that these unfortunates are their own worst enemies, and a cultivation of the art of not hearing will help us very much. It is a very useful art all through life and well worth some trouble to acquire.—Demorest's Magazine.

An Indian Trader tells his story of Kickapoo Indian Sagwa.

Cured of a Distressing Stomach Difficulty.

Rushville, Neb., June 5

Sometime ago after suffering severely with stomach trouble and dyspepsia, which had been greatly aggravated by the alkali water of the western country, and when I had reached that stage where I could frequently hold nothing on my stomach, and would even throw up water as soon as drank, I learned from a Sioux Indian, who had been on a visit to the Kickapoo tribe, of a wonderful remedy called "Sagwa." I got him to procure some for me. The effect was remarkable. I tried to get more from the Indian, but he would not let me have more of his. He prized it so much he would not give it up. I then learned that Healy & Bigelow, of New Haven, Conn., had an arrangement with the Kickapoo tribe, and was putting their remedies on the market. I sent and got a bottle of the Kickapoo Indian Sagwa, and found it to be the same as that I had procured from the Sioux Indian. I got more, and after the use of a few bottles, I was not only relieved but entirely cured, and have stayed cured ever since.

I can eat anything set before me. Salt bacon, which used to have a most distressing effect, I can now eat and relish like an Indian.

I cannot speak too highly of the Kickapoo remedies, and cheerfully recommend them to anyone.

AWARDED TO

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder

The highest award was given on every claim, comprising superiority in leavening power, keeping properties, purity and excellence. The verdict has been given by the best jury ever assembled for such a purpose, backed by the recommendation of the Chief Chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., who made an elaborate examination and test of all the baking powder. This is pre-eminently the highest authority on such matters in America.

This verdict conclusively settles the question and proves that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is superior in every way to any other brand.

NOTE—The Chief Chemist rejected the Alum Powders, stating to the World's Fair jury that he considered them unwholesome.

"The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table."

DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER is the standard for purity and perfection the world over, and is beyond comparison. Its purity and goodness are household words. Always full weight. Never varies. Never disappoints.

Dr. Price's is peculiarly adapted for export, as neither long sea voyages nor climatic changes affect it. Will keep fresh and sweet for years.

It is a fact that certain envious manufacturers of Baking Powder, who lacked the temerity to even place their goods in competition with Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder at the World's Fair, have, since it closed, advertised that they actually received an award. To an enlightened, appreciative public, comment on such an unfair and reprehensible act is quite unnecessary.

How Cream of Tartar Is Made.

Cream of Tartar—which enters so largely into the manufacture of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder—is obtained from the tart wines of France, Germany, Austria, etc. The Crude Tartar, called Argols, is deposited on the sides of the wine casks during the fermentation of the wine. After the wine is drawn off this crystal deposit is removed, dried and exported to America, where the elaborate process of refining goes on, producing the snow-white crystals of Cream of Tartar. Specimens of this product, in all its conditions, from the crude Argols in its original wine cask to the purified and refined article embodied in Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, were shown at the Price Baking Powder Company's late exhibit in the Agricultural Building, World's Columbian Exposition.

NOTE—The Cream of Tartar Refinery controlled by the Price Baking Powder Company is the most complete and extensive in the world.

MINNESOTA IN BRIEF

INTERESTING EVENTS OF THE WEEK IN MINNESOTA.

Important Occurrences in the North Star State Day by Day—A General Resume of the Week's Doings Arranged for Rapid Reading.

Sunday, May 20.

The special county seat election which resulted in favor of Jackson, has caused great excitement throughout the county, and Lakefield will probably contest the vote.

Fred Kitzman, oldest son of Conductor Louis Kitzman, of the Northwestern, was killed while trying to get a ride on a freight train in the Milwaukee yards in Winona. He fell under the cars and was cut in two.

Jared Benson, one of St. Paul's most respected pioneer residents, died of the ills attending old age yesterday at the residence of his son, Jared I. Benson. Mr. Benson was seventy-two years old last November, and has resided in Minnesota since 1856.

In some excavations being done by the Northern Pacific, three miles east of Carlton, the machine struck a vein of gravel so firmly cemented with iron that it became necessary to change the course of the work by 300 feet. Iron indications are good.

Peter Battleson, the assailant of Mrs. Ward and several other women in Otter Tail county, who has been hunted for the past two weeks, and who was captured yesterday, was indicted at Fergus Falls and being arraigned pleaded guilty. He will get a very heavy sentence.

Monday, May 21.

Gov. Nelson dismisses the charge of malfeasance preferred against County Auditor Burns of Ramsey county.

George Davis, a ten-year-old boy, falls over a cliff and is seriously injured at St. Paul.

Battleson, who assaulted Mrs. Ward, was given the maximum sentence of thirty years by Judge Baxter at Fergus Falls. He will sleep at Stillwater tonight.

Ruh & Vanbauk, a lumber firm of Jordan, filed an assignment to-day. Their assets aggregate about $1,500 and their liabilities about $6,000. Loss in contracting was the chief cause which brought about the assignment.

Judge Chapman began action at Fergus Falls to foreclose the bonds of the Fergus Falls Water company. The interest and taxes have been defaulted. The bonds amount to $70,000 and are all held by Minneapolis parties.

A man was found in the Chippewa river near Benson. His team was hitched to the fence and he was lying face down in the shallow water. His friends recognized the body as that of Knute Thorson, living in Pope county.

A fire, the cause of which is unknown, destroyed the coal shed of the Northern Pacific road, located in the center of Detroit. The loss will be trivial, as the fire department saved all the coal.

Mrs. Fred Kirchner, with her two little boys of Hastings bade her husband adieu, leaving with August Timerick, a stranger, for Kansas City, having forwarded the household furniture in the morning. Timerick claims to be a brother of Mrs. Kirchner, but the relationship, from various suspicious circumstances, seems to be doubted by Mr. Kirchner, who is now left lonely in his desolate home. Mrs. Kirchner is an old resident of the city, aged about forty years. Her departure has created quite a sensation in the city.

Tuesday, May 22.

A young lady student at the Minnesota state university commits suicide by poisoning.

Edward McDonald, a laboring man while intoxicated, fell from the court house steps at St. Paul and fractured his skull. He was taken to the city hospital, where he died a few hours later.

The Adrian city council let the contract for electric light and water works to Sykes & Wagner of Minneapolis for $18,000. The Siemans-Holske company's electric system was adopted.

Henry Cowgill, a resident of Mantorville, this state, was robbed of $85 on the river bank at the foot of Sibley street, St. Paul, by one lone robber who shoved a big revolver under Cowgill's nose and told him to "shell out" or take chances of having his hide riddled with bullets.

Wednesday, May 23.

Ald. Rollins of Minneapolis, convicted of libeling Mayor Eustis, is sentenced to pay a fine of $100.

J. F. Wheeler, a pioneer settler of Anoka county, was found dead in bed. He was seventy-six years old and greatly respected here.

Ed Martin and a driver for the John Martin Lumber company, named Larson were very seriously injured in a runaway at Northfield. Murphy's injuries will probably prove fatal.

Fire totally destroyed the Sprague flouring mill at Rushford. A spark from the engine is supposed to have been the cause. Loss $25,000; no insurance.

A Red Wing special says: The carcasses of forty or fifty head of cattle which were drowned in Rush river, Pierce county, last week, have floated down into Lake Pepin and stranded at Rest Island.

Rush & Vonbank, a lumber firm of Jordan made an assignment Saturday for the benefit of creditors. Their assets aggregate about $1,500 and their liabilities about $6,000. Loss in contracting was the chief cause which brought about the assignment.

Fifty thousand wall-eyed pike were successfully placed in Redwood river Sunday. This is the first time the fish commission has sent them without an attendant. Not one was dead. In the future they will send them this way and save considerable expense to the state.

George W. Post, of Duluth, the attorney charged with subornation of perjury in connection with land office frauds, was given a hearing before Judge Garey and held to the United States grand jury, which meets in June. Bail was fixed at $1,000.

A free night school organized at New Ulm is being successfully conducted in the high school building and supplies a long felt want in the community. The school board will probably adopt the night school as a permanent feature of the public school system of this city.

Dr. Boyd, of Alexandria was called to examine a very strange case early this week. Mrs. Noland of La Grand in bathing her baby noticed some pointed articles near the surface of the abdomen. The child did not seem to be in any pain, neither was there much inflammation, but Dr. Boyd, after carefully examining the place, made an incision and extracted a common sewing needle.

Thursday, May 24.

William Peters of Milaca was drowned in Rum river in attempting to save his little daughter's hat, which had blown into the river.

The Indian school building at Leech Lake burned. The teachers and children escaped without injury. Most of the furnishings were burned.

The R. D. Hubbard Milling company has been incorporated in Mankato with a capital stock of $300,000. R. D. Hubbard, Jay Hubbard and George M. Palmer are the incorporators.

Articles of incorporation of the Citizens' State Bank of Slayton were filed with the register of deeds. Capital, $10,000. Incorporators: James Garrison, Martha Garrison, Joseph Strong.

Fifty-nine students will graduate from the state normal school at St. Cloud, the largest number in the history of the institution. Gov. Nelson will be present and make the presentation of diplomas.

George Abrisch of Oakdale is locked up in the county jail at Stillwater charged with having outraged little Anna Matz, six years of age, daughter of his employer. Abrish was arrested in St. Paul. He has a very bad record.

John Anderson, son of James Anderson, living three miles north of St. Charles, fell forty feet from the roof of a building. He was shingling on the farm of Peter Youst. His arm and several ribs are broken, besides internal injuries. There is little hope of his recovery.

Friday, May 25.

John Gustdorf, aged sixty-seven, was found dead in bed at Red Wing. He had never been ailing.

A. R. C. Blom of Milan was run over by a wood car. His foot must be amputated.

George A. Franklin of Delavan, Ill., has been elected superintendent of the Faribault public schools by the board of education.

Bernard Weibel, an employe in the Northwestern yards at New Ulm, committed suicide by shooting himself in the left temple. The cause was trouble over money matters.

William Lambert, a switchman in the Omaha yards in St. James, had a bad accident. While switching his left hand became entangled in the cars, smashing it badly and cutting one finger entirely off.

Burglars broke into the general store of Lammers & Rieke at Fairfax and succeeded in carrying off goods and valuables to the amount of $250, consisting of jewelry, clothing, fine gloves, etc. No clue to the perpetrators.

George Rupley, for thirteen years manager of the Lake Superior and Union Improvement Elevator companies of Duluth, has been let out. The change is undoubtedly due to the trouble into which the companies fell last summer, which resulted in the appointment of a receiver.

Saturday, May 26.

An asbestos mine five feet thick has been found on the farm of John Dripps, two miles north of Morton, of a better quality than that at Belleview.

John Mager, a young farmer living six miles south of Lanesboro, started home under the influence of liquor and was thrown from his wagon in the outskirts of town and killed.

The Northfield city council issued a call for a special city election to vote $40,000 bonds for the construction of waterworks. The election is held on the 25th.

William Dyer, one of Hastings' oldest and most esteemed citizens, died aged seventy-seven years. He had been extensively engaged in the culture of bees for many years, and was well known throughout the state.

Two Polish boys, aged nine, Frank Chikeliuski and Max Glisicznski, were drowned by falling out of a boat in the backwater of the river in the lower part of Winona. The bodies were recovered.

C. D. Wright has been appointed receiver of the Fergus Falls Water company. It is understood that N. M. Littlejohn, president of the company, who holds most of the stock, will abandon the plant.

At Mankato, the jury returned a verdict of $500 for Joseph Baumgartner and against the Mankato Street Railway company for personal injuries received on account of the condition of defendant's tracks.

The Danish Baptist conference for the State of Minnesota commenced a five days' session at the Danish Baptist church at Kasson. Clergymen and delegates from all over the state are in attendance, and indications point to a very successful session.

YOUNG MEN AT THE FRONT

Few Venerables to Be Found Among European Sovereigns and Statesmen.

Lord Rosebery's succession to the premiership serves to call the New Orleans Picayune's attention to the fact that whereas during the first decade after the Franco-German war, and throughout the major part of the second, the destinies of Europe were controlled by monarchs and statesmen of advanced age, their power is now vested in the hands of comparatively very young men. This is, indeed, the epoch of youth. Lord Beaconsfield, Prince Gortchakoff, Prince Bismarck, M. Thiers, Depretis, Gladstone and the Danish statesman, Estrupp, have all either died or withdrawn into private life, and the same may be said of their masters. The German emperor, who is undoubtedly the man at the helm in the Teutonic empire, is only 33 years old; the prince of Bulgaria is 33, the emperor of Russia 49, while the king of Wurtemburg, the king of Portugal, and the king of Greece are all young men. Still more youthful are the king of Holland, the young king of Servia, and the little king of Spain. As regards statesmen, we find young men, such as Lord Rosebery, and Mr. Asquith, the husband elect of Miss Margot Tennant, occupying the principal executive offices of the British crown. The Austrian prime minister, Prince Windisgraetz, is under 40, and Cardinal Rompolla, the papal secretary of state, is barely one or two years over that age. M. Casimir-Perrier, the French prime minister, is about 48 years of age, while M. Dupuy, his predecessor, and now president of the chamber of deputies, is about three years younger. Many other names might be added to the list, but the above will suffice to show that we are living in the golden age of youth, and that while age and experience are at a discount youth and enthusiasm are above par.

He Quit at That.

Fresh Drummer (who got o[illegible] ast station)—You will pardon me speaking to you; but when I see a pretty woman all alone I always interest myself. And you know we drummers are hard to beat.

Pretty Young Woman (coolly)—Oh, I don't know! My husband, who will be back as soon as he finishes his cigar, had no trouble beating the other two chaps who tried to flirt with me.—Boston Herald.

KEEP TRADE AT HOME

THE NORTHWESTERN HOME CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATION.

Business Men From Various Points Meet in Minneapolis and Form an Association—John A. Willard of Mankato Elected First President.

Minneapolis, May 24.—It was after 10 o'clock when those in attendance at the initial meeting of the Northwestern Home Consumers' association were called to order in Lumber Exchange hall by George H. Parker, who has been the promoter of the idea from the first. Previous to that hour, however, members of the reception committee, with their badges of yellow, were present welcoming the delegates. The entire reception committee having in charge the entertainment of the outside delegates consists of the following well known Northwestern business men: F. P. Hopwood, F. H. George, H. C. Aldrich, E. P. Loye, C. H. Maxey, W. R. Overmire, George J. Schearer, C. B. Spicer, W. J. Tarbell, D. C. Warden, J. S. McLain and W. F. Ustick.

Upon arrival at the Lumber Exchange hall all delegates were given badges of blue and gold. The list of delegates present at the meeting is a large one and includes representatives from a number of the large Northwestern cities. After G. H. Parker had called the meeting to order John A. Willard of Mankato was named as temporary chairman and George H. Parker as temporary secretary. In taking the chair Mr. Willard made a short speech, thanking those present for the honor.

H. D. Brown moved that a committee of ten be appointed on permanent organization, and the motion prevailed. The committee on organization reported the following names for the first board of directors: E. E. Noble, Superior, Wis.; W. W. Stockton, Faribault; H. M. Kinney Winona; George Tileston, St. Cloud; E. T. Howard, Red Wing; E. S. Warner, H. D. Brown, Edward Yanish and L. M. Makinsen, St. Paul; George A. Brackett, William M. Regan, F. P. Hopwood and George M. Parker, Minneapolis.

At the afternoon session of the convention the most important report submitted was that of the committee on permanent organization. This committee submitted a constitution and by-laws, the provisions of which are as follows:

Article 1 provides that the name of the organization shall be the Northwestern Home Trade association. In the second article the object of the organization is expressed fully, as follows: "The object of this association shall be to promote loyalty on the part of Northwestern people to Northwestern manufactured products and a sentiment in favor of buying all classes of merchandise from home merchants."

The principal office of the organization shall be located in Minneapolis, and a branch office may be located in each city or town at the discretion of the board of directors. The management of the affairs of the association is to be vested in a board of directors, one of which shall be selected from each city having five or more general members, and one for each additional five or more members. The management of the branch offices for local work shall be vested largely in themselves, but they shall each pay $25 dues to the general association. The president of the latter shall be entitled to the same privileges as the general active members. Active local members shall be subjected to dues amounting to $5 annually and general local members shall be citizens who will sign an agreement to purchase goods of home manufacture only wherever it is possible. Active members shall be subject to dues at the rate of $24 per annum, provided they do a business of $50,000 or less; $48 if they do business amounting to $250,000 or over. The payments are to be made quarterly. The annual meeting of the association will be held the first Tuesday in May each year.

The report of the committee on permanent organization recommended the following officers: President, John A. Willard, Mankato; vice president, T. B. Walker, Minneapolis; second vice president, J. F. Broderick, St. Paul; treasurer, J. A. Gregg, St. Paul; secretaries, George W. Parker, Minneapolis; E. S. Warner, St. Paul. The report of the committee, after a very little discussion, was unanimously adopted by a rising vote. The meeting then adjourned.

A ROTTEN BRIDGE.

A Bad State of Affairs at Chippewa—One Man Sacrificed.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., May 24.—At about 6:30 this morning, while John Swaner, a driver for the Chippewa Lumber and Boom company, was crossing the Columbia street bridge with a load of slabs the floor gave way, precipitating the team, load and driver into the creek, a distance of sixteen feet. The man was taken out with difficulty and taken to the hospital. An examination disclosed the fact that the pelvic bones were badly broken, also several ribs. At present it is not certain that he will recover. Examination of the bridge showed a horrible state of affairs, the timbers being rotten almost completely through. It is a wonder it held itself up.

Confirmed.

Washington, May 24.—C. H. J. Taylor, the colored Kansan over whose confirmation to be recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia there has been a spirited debate in the senate, was confirmed at to-day's executive session, the vote standing 34 to 15. There were no speeches made, beyond a few remarks by Senator Hill to the effect that the Democratic party platform on the subject of home rule should be observed. The division in the vote was not over party lines, but Taylor received a larger percentage of Republican votes than at first seemed probable. The senate also confirmed by a party vote the nomination of Clark S. Rowe to be register of the land office at Chamberlain, S. D.

A Boy's Fate.

Cumberland, Wis., May 24.—Guy St. Clair, aged fourteen years, failed to return home last night and inquiry proved that he was not at school yesterday afternoon. The last seen of him he was fishing from a high bank on the lake. His parents and many friends hunted for him all night and are still searching without success.

Assay Office at Duluth.

Washington, May 24.—Representative Baldwin has introduced a bill to establish an assay office at Duluth.

Thousands Slain.

New York, Special—The Herald's La Libertad dispatch says: There has been very fierce fighting here since May 15 between the national troops and the rebels. A series of desperate battles have been fought with severe losses on both sides. More than 3,000 troops have been killed, and many wounded.

Canal Projects.

Washington, Special—Several canal projects were considered by the house committee on railways and canals yesterday. Representative Storer spoke upon the proposed ship canal to connect the Ohio river and Lake Erie, setting forth the advantages of a route between Cincinnati and Toledo.

INSULTED OUR FLAG.

Stars and Stripes Dragged in Canadian Dirt.

St. Thomas, Ont., May 26.—The American flag in front of the United States consul's office in this city was torn down last night and destroyed by some members of the Queen's Own Rifles of Toronto while under the influence of liquor. Some other members of the regiment who were in the crowd protested against the outrage but were unable to prevent their excited companions from carrying out their intention. Lieut. Smith, D. G. A., apologized to United States Consul Willis for the act, but Mr. Willis would not accept the apology and notified the heads of his department at Washington and Ottawa. The incident is looked upon here as merely the result of too much whisky, and while it is generally deplored by the citizens, it is hoped nothing serious will result.

Toronto, Ont., May 26.—Several officers of the Queen's Own regiment were seen with reference to the outrage upon the American flag at St. Thomas. They all denied knowing anything about the affair. One of them said: "If it is true, it is certainly a most regrettable occurrence and can only be excused on the ground that the perpetrators must have been intoxicated."

The incident has caused quite a sensation in military and other circles in the city, and the action of the hair brained perpetrators is strongly condemned.

GO TO OTTAWA.

The Next Meeting of the B. L. E. Will Be Held in Ontario.

St. Paul, May 26.—Ottawa, Ont., was chosen this morning as the place for holding the next convention of the B. L. E. Last night there were three cities in the race—Salt Lake City, Columbus and Ottawa. On the last ballot yesterday the latter place had fewer votes in its favor than either of the other cities. There was some irregularity about the ballot, however, and Albert Hudson, leader of the Canadian delegation, succeeded in having the ballot set aside. This morning Ottawa showed up in the lead on the first ballot and Salt Lake City, which led yesterday, being the lowest, was dropped out, leaving Columbus and Ottawa the only competitors, and the latter won. The selection of Ottawa was mainly due to the generalship of Albert Hudson, who is chairman of the dominion legislative committee, and his efforts were further rewarded by the convention which elected him third grand assistant engineer.

SHOT AT A WOLF HUNT.

Almost a Murder in the Vicinity of Creston, Iowa.

Creston, Iowa, May 26.—A shooting affair occurred at Bedford Tuesday which grew out of a wolf hunt. A number of citizens spent the day waging a war of extermination against the wolf. A large number were killed. When the time for dividing the spoils came dissatisfaction arose between John Philpot and Thomas Powers, two of the huntsmen, Powers having the most of the wolves in a cart and would not divide with the other hunters. Philpot fired two shots at him. One bullet took effect and Powers is in a critical condition. Philpot is in the county jail awaiting trial.

Condition of Trade.

New York, May 26.—Bradstreet's trade review says: The unfavorable conditions prevailing in commercial and industrial circles throughout the country, together with the prospect for no material improvement during the summer marks the present season as probably the dullest relatively for twenty years. At no time since the panic and business depression manifested themselves last year have reports as to the volume of sales of merchandise, the manufacture of staple goods, and the indisposition of merchants generally to buy except for absolutely immediate wants been so pronounced and so general throughout the country as during the past few weeks.

Abducted by Jumbo.

Spokane, Wash., May 26.—Spokane is stirred over a commonweal abduction. Gen. "Jumbo" Cartwell, leader of the Tacoma wealers, who left the city yesterday for Great Falls, is charged with the abduction of two Spokane girls, Hilda Stein and Rosa Roga, the latter a bride of several weeks. The last known of the girls they took the east-bound Great Northern train. Indications are that their objective point is Great Falls.

Big Figures for a Gold Mine.

Riverside, Cal., May 26.—The Santa Rosa quartz mine, located near Perris, has been sold. The mine was the property of ex-Gov. Blaisdell of Nevada, and the purchasers are W. T. Brevoort and W. H. Griffith of Denver. The price paid is not known, but it is reported at a big figure. The new owners will build a large reduction works at once.

Exceptional Honor.

London, May 26.—Gen. Sir Donald Stewart and Gen. Lord Wolseley have been created field marshals. This is an exceptional honor. There have been only five such appointments previously, two of the appointees being the prince of Wales and the duke of Cambridge.

Peruvian Plotters Prisoners.

New York, May 26.—The Herald's Lima, dispatch says: Several prisoners charged with political offenses have been removed to Calao and placed in dungeons. Among the prisoners is the poet Chocano.

Gen. Roberts to Command.

Dublin, May 26.—The Freeman's Journal says that Gen. Lord Frederick Roberts, formerly commander-in-chief of the army in India, will succeed Gen. Lord Garnet Wolseley in the autumn as commander of the forces in Ireland.

Killed While Drunk.

Lanesboro, Minn., May 26.—John Mager, a young farmer living six miles south of Lanesboro, started home under the influence of liquor and was thrown from his wagon in the outskirts of town and killed.

Second Degree Murder.

Columbus, Ind., May 26.—Ralph Drake, on trial for the murder of Ida Ward, his mistress, in this city last June, was today convicted of murder in the second degree and sentenced to imprisonment for life.

Freddie Johnson's Adventure.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Special.—Freddie Johnson, six years old, was run over by an electric car at East Sioux Falls last night. He was playing on the car and tried to get off while it was in motion. The flesh and muscles were stripped from the leg bone, and his right foot had to be amputated.

Talked on the Altamonte Bill.

Washington, Special—A hearing was had in the committee on Indian affairs on Baldwin's Altamonte Water company bill. John Arnold Keyes of Duluth made a long statement, but declined to commit himself on either side of the controversy.

ELEVEN MEN KILLED

DESPERATE DEED OF STRIKING MINERS IN COLORADO.

They Blow Up a Shaft Building and Explode Giant Powder in the Mine, Killing Eleven Men Who Were at Work.

Cripple Creek, Colo., May 26.—Eleven men killed, with a strong probability of the number of dead being increased when all is known, is the record of the first day of trouble here, although real fighting has not yet begun, as the deputies are awaiting reinforcements before beginning active operations. At 10 o'clock this morning eleven started to work in the Strong mine, on Battle mountain. Shortly afterward a large party of strikers blew up the shaft house with powder, causing a loss of $25,000, and then dropped 100 pounds of giant powder down the shaft, which was also exploded, killing all the inmates. Not more than 300 yards from the Strong shaft house sixteen men who had been engaged to go to work in the Independence mine were surrounded in their bunk house and after a long parley agreed to surrender. Each one was armed with a rifle and a brace of revolvers. The arms are now in the possession of the strikers.

It is rumored that the strikers attacked the Anna Lee mine, overpowered the guards, and blew up the shaft house, but the rumor has not yet been verified.

When the deputies are finally massed and the two forces come together a most desperate battle will doubtless follow. The situation is one of most painful anxiety. Not a few believe that the town will be a smouldering mass by another sunset if the strikers are not restrained. It is said that the strikers have planted under their breastworks, on Bull hill, a quantity of dynamite with the intention of blowing it up if it should be taken and occupied by the deputies. One of the largest mine owners in Colorado Springs is authority for the statement that the mine owners have planted a rifled cannon on a hill commanding the breastworks, and that it will be used to dislodge the strikers from their position.

Connellsville, Pa., May 26.—The cold rain last night dispersed several mobs of strikers and probably averted bloodshed. The strikers are excited over the killing of their fellow workmen at Washington mines, and were ready for any desperate undertaking to revenge the terrible slaughter. Several mobs were organized with the avowed intention of killing some deputies, but the cold rain and biting northwest wind drove them to shelter.

Chicago, May 26.—Troops have arrived at the various points where miners have been rioting, and now all is quiet.

THE POMP OF WAR.

Army Officers in Full Uniform Sit in Lieut. Maney's Trial.

St. Paul, May 24.—The trial by court martial of Lieut. James A. Maney, Fifteenth United States infantry, began this morning in the court martial room at Fort Snelling, upper post. Lieut. Maney and his attorney, F. P. Blair, were driven out to the fort early this morning and all the officers summoned to this trial from the various army posts of the country reached the fort at an early hour. The accused lieutenant was visible about the headquarters for over an hour before the trial began. He seemed entirely indifferent to the proceedings in which it was natural to suppose him the chiefly interested party, and chatted quietly with his brother officers as though he were simply a witness instead of being the defendant. The indictment charges conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline: "In that First Lieutenant James A. Maney, Fifteenth infantry, United States army, did wrongfully engage in an altercation and scuffle with his superior officer, Capt. Alfred Hedberg, of the same regiment, and did use insulting language toward him, and did violently assault and kick him, the said Hedberg, and did draw and point a pistol at him, and did, further, actually shoot him, the said Hedburg, causing death. This at Fort Sheridan, Ill., on Oct. 30, 1893."

Fort Snelling, Minn., May 25.—The Maney court martial has adjourned until to-morrow, and Maney's counsel will apply to the United States court for a writ prohibiting the continuance of the investigation. At the conclusion of Col. Barr's address the court took a recess until 1:30 p. m. Reconvening at that hour it went into executive session to consider the motion of Mr. Blair. Half an hour was spent in executive session. At 2 o'clock the court was reopened, and Col. Mason announced the decision.

"The plea in bar of trial," he stated, "was not sustained. The trial will proceed."

This means that the witnesses who have been summoned will be examined and the whole circumstances of the shooting will be reviewed unless the court grants the writ.

St. Paul, Minn., May 26.—The opening of the trial of Lieut. Maney by court martial to-day presents a rather unusual state of affairs. The order of Judge Nelson issued yesterday calling on the military court to show cause why this trial should be allowed to proceed, is the first order of the kind ever issued to a court martial. The hearing does not occur until next week, and in the meantime the trial is being proceeded with as though nothing had occurred. It is not considered likely that the injunction asked for by the defense will be granted, but that there is a nice question of law to be decided by the United States supreme court every attorney present fully realizes.

Budget Adopted.

Vienna, May 26.—The lower house of the reichsrath to-day adopted the budget of 1894. It shows a surplus of 2,323,019 florins.

Very Hopeful for Gladstone.

London, May 26.—Dr. S. H. Habershon, one of the surgeons who took part in the operation upon Mr. Gladstone's right eye, says that the main task of the doctor is to increase the sight and strengthen the eyes, and that there is no reason why this should not be accomplished. Mr. Gladstone's attendants are delighted with the progress he has made toward complete recovery from the operation. The following bulletin has been issued: "Mr. Gladstone has passed a quiet night, free from discomfort. His eye is progressing quite well, and his general health is excellent."

Windy City to Be Deprived of Its Beloved Subject.

Washington, Special—The house committee on public buildings has decided to erect the new Chicago building on the site of the present postoffice. The lake front site was abandoned, and it is proposed that the new building shall cover the entire block and be ten stories high. Supervising Architecht O'Rourke told the committee that the work could be completed in three years. Meantime the postoffice will occupy rented quarters. The amount of the appropriation was not decided upon, but $4,000,000 was the amount the members seemed to favor.

MARRIED IN PRISON.

A Remarkable Case of Marriage and Divorce.

Columbus, Ohio, May 24.—There was an unusual event in the study of Chaplain Winget, of the state prison, to-day. It was a wedding in which the groom was a convict, with the major part of a seven years' sentence yet to serve, and the bride the daughter of one of Cincinnati's most prominent families. Several years ago B. F. Conrad came to Cincinnati from Minneapolis, where he had left a wife and two children. At Cincinnati he passed as a single man and married Miss Emma Eberle. They lived together happily for a time, and three children were born to them. Then the fact that he had another wife living became known. He was penitent, and Mrs. Conrad No. 2 forgave him. It was agreed that he should go back to Minnesota and secure a divorce. Then he would legally marry his Cincinnati wife. This he did, and about a year ago returned, and for the second time married Miss Eberle. Soon afterward it transpired that while he had been divorced in Minnesota, he had fallen in love with a Milwaukee girl on the way back to Cincinnati and married her. Wife No. 2 then determined to prosecute him, and he is now serving a sentence for this act of bigamy. She heartily despises the man to whom she was to-day married for the third time, and consented to having the ceremony performed only in order to make the children legitimate. The Milwaukee wife recently secured a divorce and therefore the marriage is legal. Without a word they separated at the conclusion of the ceremony, Mrs. Conrad returning to Cincinnati and her legal husband to his prison cell.

SOME OF SEYMOUR'S WORK.

A Bank Goes to Law to Recover on a Check.

Minneapolis, May 24.—One of the forgeries perpetrated on the firm of Osborne & Clarke recently by the clever swindler, Alfred W. Seymour, has just made its appearance in the municipal court in a suit brought by the Germania bank against the Washington bank and Boutell Brothers. It appears that on one occasion Seymour made a $10 purchase of Boutell Brothers and presented in payment a check for $487.90, bearing the signature of Osborne & Clarke. The furniture firm did not care to cash it and sent it across the street to the Washington bank, where the money was readily secured. Osburne & Clarke did business with the Germania bank and the check ultimately reached that institution and was paid. Two weeks later it was found that the check was a forgery and the Germania bank demanded payment from the Washington bank or Boutell Brothers. An argument on a demurrer to the complaint was heard before Judge Holt to-day and the case taken under advisement.

FIGHT WITH ROBBERS.

Battle Between Citizens and Bandits in Texas.

Longview, Tex., May 23.—Five robbers entered the First National Bank of Longview to-day. The president and cashier were ordered to hold up their hands and the robbers secured $2,500. Several officers and citizens met the robbers and a constant firing was kept up, during which George Buckingham and J. W. McQueen were killed and City Marshal Muckelroy badly wounded. One of the robbers, a small, dark complexioned man, was killed. Over 400 shots were fired. The remaining robbers escaped with the dead man's horse, and now a large posse is in close pursuit.

Prof. Dana Retires.

New Haven, Conn., May 24.—The retirement of Prof. James A. Dana, the oldest professor connected with Yale university and one of the foremost American scientists, is announced. Prof. Dana is eighty-one years of age, and is compelled to abandon further active work by feeble health. The department has been placed in the hands of Prof. H. S. Williams, who has been associated with Prof. Dana for a number of years.

Van Nimmangs' Is Happy.

Jackson, Mich., May 24.—John Van Nimmangs, serving a life sentence in the state prison for murdering his brother-in-law, John Crow, in 1885, was seen this morning. He was overjoyed when told of the report from Muncie that Crow was alive and on his way to Jackson, and said he had always felt sure that Crow would return some day. Thus far Crow has not called at the prison, nor is his name on any hotel register in the city.

South Dakota Masons.

Aberdeen, S. D., May 24.—The twentieth grand annual communication of the grand lodge of South Dakota A., F. and A. M. will be held at Hot Springs, commencing June 12. Extensive preparations for the entertainment of visiting Masons are being made by the fraternity in the Black Hills.

Cleveland Returning.

Norfolk, Va., May 24.—The presidential party arrived from North Carolina this morning about 9 o'clock and left for Washington at noon.

Secretary Herbert at Tacoma.

Tacoma, Wash., Special—Secretary of the Navy Herbert and party arrived here Wednesday evening. Secretary Herbert was banqueted by the business men at the Commercial club, and yesterday the party were shown about the city and taken across the bay to the Tacoma dry dock. The secretary will leave to-night over the Northern Pacific for Washington.

Slight Frost at Glenwood, Wis.

Glenwood, Special.—A slight frost occurred here last night. Corn and potatoes were damaged some, but will recover if there are no further frosts. Most small fruits are killed.

MINERS FIRED UPON

DEPUTIES IN PENNSYLVANIA SHOOT STRIKERS DOWN.

Strikers Induce Other Men to Quit Work, When Deputies Fire Upon Them, Killing Six Men and Wounding Many Others.

Uniontown, Pa., May 25.—At daybreak yesterday the battle which had been threatened at the Stickle Hollow mines of the Washington Coal and Coke company in the fourth pool for the past three days occurred, and as a result at least six strikers are lying dead and a half dozen are seriously wounded. It cannot be said to have been a battle, as not a shot was fired by the strikers, but seemingly without provocation the volleys were fired by the deputies, while the strikers were assembled in the public road.

Shortly before midnight 2,000 strikers assembled at the Stickle Hollow plants, coming from Lucyville, Fayette City, Freeport, Allenport and many other points on the Monongahela river. Some of them were armed, but the majority were not. They went into camp near the plant, where they remained until 3 o'clock, when they adjourned to the public road leading to the works and over which the workmen would have to pass to the pit. Here they formed a line of defense to interrupt the workmen, and attempt to get them to return home.

According to the plans, they stopped the first delegation of miners, and after a little persuasion induced them to join the strike. The men turned back, and about the time they were starting back home with their dinner buckets, the deputies who were on guard and witnesses to the affair were ordered to shoot. They fired three volleys into the mob at a range of only about thirty yards. The first volley brought forth no response from the strikers, but instead they ran in every direction, leaving the dead and wounded lying in the public road. The deputies followed with two more volleys, and were shooting when the last strikers disappeared.

The report of the affair given by the officials of the company is to the effect that six strikers were picked up dead in the road after the shooting, and a half dozen wounded ones were carried away by their comrades.

The reports say six men were killed and sixteen wounded. The company officials say the strikers served notice on them that they expected to assault the works, and acting on this information the deputies considered this interference with the workmen as the beginning of the assault, and for that reason fired upon them.

GLADSTONE MAY NOW RECOVER.

Operation for Cataract Performed on the Ex-Premier's Eye.

London, May 25.—Mr. Gladstone's right eye was successfully operated upon yesterday. Doctors Nettleship and Habershon both attended the distinguished patient in Lord Rendell's house early in the day, and some time afterwards they issued a bulletin stating that the eye had been operated upon for cataract, and that the operation was quite successful. The operation took place at 9:30 a. m., Dr. John Bowering Lawford assisting the two surgeons already mentioned. Mr. Gladstone's health was well maintained after the operation, and the doctors state that the result confirms the diagnosis of Dr. Grainger of Chester. The ex-premier is said to be in as good spirits as can possibly be expected.

Labor on the Border.

Washington, May 25.—Two representatives of the Lake Carriers' association, Col. R. C. Parsons and Harvey C. Goulder of Cleveland, made an argument to the house committee on immigration yesterday in opposition to Representative Lockwood's bill regulating labor on the border in the interest of the United States citizens. The association is a powerful organization, and is particularly opposed to the feature of the bill that requires men to be domiciled for six months in the United States before they can ship on lake vessels sailing under the United States flag.

Made a Discovery.

Belgrade, May 25.—The police have discovered a secret cartridge manufactory where ammunition for the Peabody rifle, with which the Servian militia is armed, has been turned out in large quantities. It is estimated that 3,000,000 cartridges have already been sent to the provinces. M. Tajsic, the Radical leader in the last skupstchina, has been arrested. The archpriest, Gyurics, has also been taken into custody.

Wealers Sentenced.

Cheyenne, Wyo., May 25.—B. F. Hughes, R. F. Weed and Charles O'Brien, leaders among the commonwealers who stole a Union Pacific train at Montpelier, Idaho, last week, were sentenced today by Judge Riner, of the United States court to five months imprisonment in the Laramie county jail. Twelve others were sentenced to four months' imprisonment.

Brazil and Portugal Make Up.

New York, May 25.—The Herald's Buenos Ayres dispatch says the correspondent at Rio de Janeiro telegraphs that President Piexoto has sent a message to the Brazilian congress announcing that the differences which had existed between Portugal and Brazil have been amicably settled.

For a Gold Standard.

Friedrichsroda, Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, May 25.—At a meeting here of the German Banking association, at which thirty-five banks were represented, a resolution in favor of a gold standard was unanimously adopted.

Foreign Flags May Float.

Albany, N. Y., May 25.—Gov. Flower has vetoed the bill prohibiting the display of foreign flags on public buildings.

An Unknown Wreck Discovered.

Manitowoc, Wis., May 25.—The captain of the tug J. P. Clark reports, having discovered the top mast of a vessel sticking out of the water between Sheboygan and Manitowoc, a distance of three miles from land. No clue to the ill-fated craft.

Death of Moses Greeley.

Sisseton, S. D., May 25.—Moses Greely, a prominent farmer, died yesterday from a gunshot wound which he received while out duck hunting Tuesday.

Fergus Falls Special.—The grand jury has closed its labors and has been discharged. It indicted quite a number for selling liquor. Frank Grouwe of Elizabeth was convicted of selling without a license, and pleaded guilty to selling to a minor. Henry Nokleby and Ole Thompson were indicted and tried, but the jury could not agree in either case. Dr. Von Coppellan, the litherall druggist, was indicted for two offenses. Three farmers were indicted for selling mortgaged property, but there is little show of convicting them. George Welch, an old resident here, was indicted for perjury for swearing falsely in the case of the Barclay Manufacturing company. Court will adjourn this week.

WORK OF CONGRESS

RESUME OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

Condensed Record of the Important Transactions of Our National Lawmakers—The Work Done in Both Branches.

Washington, May 29. — The senate spent eight hours to-day discussing the question of free lumber. Not a vote was taken. The tariff bill places lumber in the rough on the free list. The debate to-day on Mr. Hale's proposition to transfer lumber to the dutiable list at the rates fixed in the McKinley law was the feature. Senators Frye and Hale of Maine and Perkins of California, Mitchell and Dolph of Oregon, whose states are most particularly affected in the lumber industry, occupied the major portion of the time in the support of Mr. Hale's amendment. It is probable that the lumber paragraphs will be disposed of tomorrow. Sugar, upon which the hardest fighting in the bill will occur, followed. Mr. Walsh, the new senator from Georgia, delivered a carefully prepared speech on the general subject of the tariff.

An interesting event of the day in the house was a reading of a letter from the sons of Louis Kossuth in reply to the letter recently sent by Speaker Crisp under direction of the house. The senate bill to fix the northern boundary line of the Warm Springs Indian reservation in Oregon, was passed, as were sundry house bills.

Washington, May 30.—Senator Pettigrew made the principal speech in opposition to the tariff bill. He was listened to attentively by the senators and spectators. The senate then resumed consideration of the lumber paragraph of the tariff bill and Mr. Squire (Rep., Wash.) addressed the senate in opposition to free lumber. Mr. Hale then offered an amendment to place a uniform duty of $1 on all lumber. Defeated. Mr. Allen of Nebraska moved to place all lumber, shingles, boards, etc., used in the building of residences upon the free list. Without action on Mr. Allen's amendment the senate adjourned.

In the house a message from the president was received transmitting a dispatch from Minister Willis at Hawaii. It contains nothing specially new or important. Mr. Johnson (Rep., Ind.) made an argument in favor of a substantial stable currency, and was followed by Mr. Black of Georgia, in favor of the state bank bill. Before Mr. Black finished his speech the committee rose and the house adjourned.

Washington, June 1.—When the tariff bill was taken up in the senate several amendments offered to the lumber paragraphs, looking to a duty on rough lumber, were voted down by a strict party vote. Senator Allen moved to strike out paragraph 178, as follows:

"Lumber of any sort, planed or finished on each side, 50 cents per thousand feet, board measure, and if planed on one side and tongued and grooved $1 per thousand, and if planed on two sides and tongued and grooved, $1.50 per thousand, and in estimating board measure under this schedule no reduction shall be made on account of planing, grooving or tonguing."

Senator Vest surprised the Republicans when he announced that the amendment would be accepted on the Democratic side. As the amendment to the lumber schedule was being voted on without debate, under an agreement made on Wednesday, the vote was immediately taken and it was agreed to—34 to 24, a strict party vote. Messrs. Peffer and Allen (Pops.) voted in favor of it. This will have the effect of putting all lumber on the free list.

The sugar schedule of the tariff bill was reached, and Senator Sherman of Ohio took the floor. Senator Sherman, in the course of his remarks, asserted that if President Harrison had been reelected, and there had been no fear of tariff tinkering, the McKinley law would have yielded sufficient revenue. The fall of silver and increased demand for gold had something to do with the present financial depression, which had been added to by fear of tariff tinkering. He also declared that the South was coming round from its doctrine that protection was unconstitutional.

The senate, Senator Mills alone voting "no," passed a resolution declaring that the United States will not interfere with the affairs of the Hawaiian islands, and that the United States will regard interference with the affairs of the islands by any foreign power as an unfriendly act.

The state bank tax bill was further discussed in the house, but no action was taken.

Washington, June 2.—When the tariff bill was laid before the senate to-day the great battle over the sugar schedule began. The McKinley law placed raw sugars on the free list, imposed 1/2c duty on refined sugar and gave a bounty of 2 cents to the sugar grower. The house bill repealed the bounty and placed all sugars, raw and refined on the free list. The first bill reported from the finance committee of the senate gave a specific duty of from 1 cent to 1.285 cents per pound, according to polariscopic test. The compromise amendment, which is the one before the senate, made the sugar schedule go into effect Jan. 1, 1895, the rates being 40 per cent ad valorem on all sugars, raw and refined, one-eighth of 1 cent additional on sugars above 16 Dutch standard, with an additional tenth of a cent a pound on sugars from countries paying export bounties. It also continued the sugar treaty with Hawaii. Addresses were made by Senators Manderson, Peffer and others, but the senate adjourned without taking a vote.

The house put in the day discussing the state bank tax bill.

Washington, June 4.—The senate today resumed consideration of the sugar schedule, and several speeches were made for and against the tariff bill. The discussion has already proceeded for the utmost time that Democratic senators would admit before the debate was begun would be necessary to reach a verdict to-day or to-morrow, while others assert that there are contingencies which may postpone the disposition of the schedule until the latter part of the week. Among other lines of policy which have been considered among the opponents of the bill is that of allowing the sugar schedule to be accepted as amended by the committee on finance without taking any vote on the schedule in committee of the whole, the object being that the opponents of the bill shall not be forced to show their hands at this time, and especially that they may refrain from exhibiting their supposed strength among Democrats and Populist senators. Senator Harris adheres to his determination to ask the senate to prolong its daily sessions into the evening, beginning with to-day.

The state bank tax bill was under discussion by the house to-day. The question has been debated until the leaders are anxious for a vote. But the debate has shown the state bank men that they are liable to be defeated by inability to agree on any one of the many plans discussed. As the state bank principle was incorporated in the Democratic national platform the leaders are loth to see the bill defeated, so that a caucus to-day or to-morrow may be called for the purpose of formulating a party measure which will command united support. It is probable that the final vote on the bill will be taken early in the week unless the whole question is allowed to go over until a caucus committee can frame a satisfactory bill.

EMPTIES HIS REVOLVER.

Attempts to Kill His Wife and Others and Then Suicides.

Ashton, S. D., June 4.—William Shepard, a farmer living fifteen miles northeast, attempted the life of his wife, Mary Shepard, her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. John Stevenson, and a man named John Sebrose. Shepard's wife left him a week ago and went to live with her father and mother, who were living on the Sebrose farm, a mile southeast of Mellette. Shepard made his appearance, and, stepping into the house, commenced firing, first at Sebrose, who escaped and ran for help. Turning on the Stevensons he shot the man twice through the shoulder and Mrs. Stevenson through the arm. By this time his revolver was empty and he stopped to reload, but his wife succeeded in snatching it from him. At this he picked up a stone, and, turning upon her, beat her over the head until she was apparently lifeless. Turning to Mrs. Stevenson he said: "Mary is dead. I will leave you alive to take care of the children." By this time help from the town was approaching and he fled. He was found dead about a mile from the house, having taken poison. The others are alive, but the wife's condition is critical.

Tried to Suicide.

Minneapolis, June 4.—P. H. Doyle, a harness maker, until recently in the employ of the firm of Sayer & Grahn, 110 Third street south, made a determined attempt to commit suicide by taking a large dose of chloroform. His friends state that he has recently been discharged and, feeling badly over his dismissal, tried to end his troubles in death. He was taken to the city hospital, and though his life was despaired of for a time, he was finally brought back to life, and is thought to be out of danger.

War Soon Over.

Sofia, June 4.—The government has telegraphed to its representatives abroad explaining its programme. Official visits have also been made to the diplomats here for the purpose of giving assurances in regard to the policy of the government. The crisis is considered to be over. The report that ex-Prime Minister Stambuloff has been arrested is unfounded. He received a large number of visitors, including the diplomats stationed in this city.

Death Preferred to Work.

Chester, Ill., June 4.—A peculiar case of suicide is given out by the authorities of the prison here in the death of James Murray, a convict sentenced from Marion county for larceny. Murray resorted to all kinds of methods to avoid working. Last Monday he secured a large bar of lye soap. This he ate, and was at once taken with spasms. He died in awful agony.

Socialists Dispersed.

Paris, June 4.—The demonstration by the socialists in commemoration of the "bloody week of the commune," which it was proposed to make to-day at the cemetery of Pere La Chaise, was abandoned. Attempts were made by the socialists to hold meetings elsewhere, but the police interfered and suppressed them.

Soldiers Sentenced.

Capetown, June 4.—Dispatches from Buluwayo say that two British troopers, Daniels and Wilson, charged with appropriating the sum of 1,000 pounds, which the late King Lobengula sent the British authorities as a peace offering and as a notification that he was willing to submit, have been sentenced to fourteen years' imprisonment.

Bell Resigns.

Washington, June 4.—J. Lowrie Bell, second assistant postmaster general, has resigned his office to accept the position of general traffic manager of the Central Railway of New Jersey at a much higher salary. His former letter of resignation was sent to Postmaster General Bissell last Thursday, and is to take effect June 30, the close of the present fiscal year.

Danger Is Past.

Denver, Col., June 4.—The Platte river is falling, and all danger from the flood in this city is past. The number of people in and about the city who have been made homeless is estimated at 500. The greatest damage is suffered by railroads, whose tracks along the river banks were washed away.

Hungry Crickets.

Landers, Wyo., June 4.—Landers valley is threatened with destruction by the Mormon or tah cricket. Many of these are two and one-half inches long They devour all before them.

Imperial Movements.

Vienna, June 4.—Emperor Francis Joseph will go to Budapest to-morrow and will stay there several days.

Drowned in a Cloudburst.

Durango, Mex., June 4.—A cloudburst occurred in the Sierre Madre mountains, about seventy miles south of here, and a camp of charcoal burners was washed away by the flood, which came raging down the mountain gulch. Ten charcoal burners were in the camp, and all were drowned.

Snow on the Mountains.

Manitou, Col., June 4.—The storm just ended was the heaviest ever recorded by the government signal service bureau at the summit of Pike's Peak. There are seven feet of snow on the mountain, and it is a beautiful sight.

THE RIVER RISING.

THE SITUATION AT PORTLAND BECOMES PERILOUS.

Three-Fourths of the Wholesale District Is Under Water From Two to Ten Feet and the River Continues to Rise.

Denver, June 2.—The Platte river continued to rise until 3 a. m. to-day, and a raging torrent is likely to continue pouring through this city all day. Colfax and Jerome Park were flooded at 11 o'clock last night, and the people living on the low ground had to flee for their lives. The railway embankment was washed away in places and bridges were badly damaged. The loss will not be very great, but the inconvenience will be extreme. In Jerome Park and vicinity 175 families were driven out of their houses and are camped on higher ground. As many more families living on the river bottoms in this city also fled to higher ground. Edward Whitman, a boy, fell into the torrent and was drowned. No other fatalities have been reported. It will be several days before trains can be run on any of the roads entering Denver. The Denver & Rio Grande is running trains only to Colorado Springs, owing to a bad wash-out just below there. The Missouri Pacific and Rock Island trains, using the Rio Grande tracks, are consequently cut off. The Santa Fe is in a worse predicament, its tracks being washed away in many places in the Arkansas valley. It is sending trains on the Rio Grande via Trinidad.

Boulder, Colo., June 2.—The pipe factory, five houses, the railroad tracks and all the city and railroad bridges have been washed away by the flood in Boulder creek. Poverty flats are submerged. The branches of the Gulf road and the Mountain road bridges are entirely gone. The towns of Crisman and Salina, mining camps in Boulder canyon, the former six, and the latter nine, miles from Boulder, have been wiped out of existence. They had a population of about 200, who are now homeless. Many placer mines are ruined. The total loss in and around Boulder is estimated at $500,000.

Later reports show that six or seven towns have been completely washed away and several more partially destroyed.

Portland, Or., June 4.—This has been a busy day in Portland. All day long merchants in the flooded districts have been at work moving goods or raising them on platforms above the water. The river continues to expand every hour and the situation becomes more perilous. The weather has become cooler here, but no reports could be had from Eastern Oregon and Washington, the source of all the flood. Telegraph wires north and east are down and it is impossible to obtain any news of the situation along the Columbia river. The river here is thirty-one feet above low water mark and every twenty-four hours adds to it from eight to twelve inches. Three-fourths of the wholesale district is under water from two to ten feet, and the water is fast encroaching upon the best part of the retail district. Hundreds of small houses on the flats are surrounded by water up to the second story.

Denver, June 4.—J. E. Murden, contracting agent of the Union Pacific, is in the city, having walked all the distance from Central City to Golden. He said: "No one can conceive of the destruction in that part of the country. Every mine in Central City and vicinity is flooded and there is not a vestige of the placer is left in Clear Creek. Between Central City and Works Creek there are twenty-eight wash-outs, averaging from one to five feet in width Between Idaho Springs and Golden there are thirty-six washouts. The mining men in Central City estimate the loss to the county at $500,000.

St. Joseph, June 4.—As a direct result of the high water in the Missouri river the once prosperous village of Winthrop, thirty miles south of St. Joe, will soon be wiped off the face of the earth. The Missouri river this year began cutting the edge of the town, and to-day half of the place has melted into the river. The channel of the river is changing completely. The water is now within a few rods of the tracks of the Rock Island, Hannibal & St. Joe, Missouri Pacific and Kansas City roads, and is rapidly cutting its way into their rights of way. Great pecuniary damage is entailed. If the railroads are compelled to move it will necessitate abandoning the $100,000 railroad bridge connecting Winthrop and Atchison. Winthrop, which was a town of 1,500 people, has already lost half its population, and as the houses cannot be sold they are being torn down and carried into the country. Farmers who owned farms valued at $8,000 and $10,000 two months ago are now without an acre of ground.

RUSSIAN COLONY.

Arrangements Completed to Establish It in South Dakota.

Huron, S. D., June 4.—Hon. William M. Schoof of Potter county was here today with a couple of gentlemen from Odessa, Russia, with whom arrangements were completed for the establishment of a colony of twenty or more families of Russians upon lands in Potter county. Arrangements were also completed with officers of the Chicago & Northwestern for transporting the immigrants and movables from Chicago to their new homes in Potter county, where they will engage in stock raising and farming. Representatives of the colony have gone to Russia and will return with the families in about sixty days.

Killed His Beautiful Wife.

St. Louis, Mo., June 4.—Shortly after midnight this morning Mrs. Lizzie Lockner, a beautiful woman, was shot and killed by her husband, who escaped from the house after firing the fatal shot, and has not been apprehended. Lockner and his wife were both Hebrews. The murderer has been out of employment for some time, and despondency over their poverty is thought to have been the reason for his committing the terrible deed.

Norwegian Hospital.

Chicago, June 4.—Six thousand people witnessed the laying of the corner stone of the Norwegian hospital by the Norwegian Lutheran Tabitha society this afternoon. The hospital, when finished, will be the first Norwegian charitable institution in the city.

Gladstone Recovering.

London, June 4.—Mr. Gladstone has so far recovered from the effects of the recent operation he underwent for cataract that he drove out to-day in a close carriage.

FIRE IN OTTUMWA.

Five Blocks of Buildings Are Now Smoking Ruins.

Ottumwa, Iowa, June 4.—A disastrous fire occurred here yesterday and five blocks are a mass of charred timbers and debris. One person was burned to death, one fatally affected by smoke and three others were seriously injured.

The dead is James Seymour, a dwarfed boy, burned to death.

The injured are Bert Batterson, suffocated; will die. John McCullom, firemen; seriously burned. Nick Renner, leg broken. Jerry Seymour, overcome by heat, and hurt by falling timbers.

The five blocks destroyed by the flames included fifteen business houses and twenty dwellings. The loss is estimated at $225,000, with about one-third covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to have originated from the spark of a locomotive. The following is a list of the heaviest losers: W. R. Beck, druggist, $5,000; Charles Reifsnyder & Son, butchers and cold storage, $15,000; Mangan & Carr, grocers, $3,000 on building and $2,000 on stock; E. J. McLaughlin, grocer, $15,000; Jerry Spooner, cooper, $3,000; saloon and two dwellings, $4,500; Cascade laundry, $4,000; Poe Underwood, druggist, $6,000; John Baier, residence, $5,000; Mary Leighton, three dwellings, $3,800; Samuel Mahon, brick building and dwellings, $6,500.

A TIRADE FROM TYNAN.

Synopsis of the Book Written by the Famous "No. 1."

New York, June 4.—The Associated Press has obtained from the World advance proofs of the sensational book upon Irish affairs, written by P. J. Tynan, the Irish Invincible, more generally known as "Number 1." The book referred to is entitled "Irish National Invincibles and Their Times," and its apparent purpose is to establish beyond a doubt the connection of the "Invincibles" with the Irish parliamentary party. On the other hand it is asserted by some Irishmen that Mr. Tynan's book was written in order to further the campaign of Lord Salisbury and the Tory party, and that it is simply campaign literature from the Conservative camp. In fact it is stated that even at this time, before the book is supposed to have been seen by more than a few friends of the author, copious extracts from it have been made and that millions of circulars calling attention to Mr. Tynan's book have been printed ready for distribution to English voters, upon the dissolution of parliament. The Irish parliamentary party publicly denounced the authors of the Phoenix Park crimes, and in so doing it is claimed by Mr. Tynan they were "sailing under false colors to betray the trusting Irish." "For this," says Mr. Tynan in his introductory chapter, "and for the purpose of exposing their hypocrisy, this book was undertaken." The Irish parliamentary party is declared to have been cognizant of and a party to the Phoenix Park assassinations. Parnell and Gladstone are denounced.

MACHINERY IS BURNED.

A Minneapolis Firm Suffers a Loss of About $130,000.

Minneapolis, June 4.—The manufacturing plant of R. R. Howell & Co., located on the Northern Pacific railroad and Thirteenth street southeast, was totally destroyed by fire Saturday evening, making a loss to the firm of fully $130,000. The factory was a perfect hive of industry, being full of expensive machinery and was crowded with work. About fifty men will be thrown out of employment, but only temporarily, as a member of the firm gave them the cheering assurance that it would be rebuilt at once. The firm has a number of valuable orders to fill and has moreover built up a splendid trade in spite of the dull times. The plant was built about four years ago. The main building, the only one destroyed, is a three-story brick structure, 60x100 feet in dimensions. The fire broke out shortly before 8 o'clock and is supposed to have had its start in the boiler room adjoining the main building.

Fire in St. John.

St. John, N. B., June 4.—This city suffered from a series of fires this morning, the total loss from which is $288,000. The first one started in the big Merritt business block on Market Square which was occupied by Charles Parker, druggist, and H. A. McCullough, dry goods, their stocks being almost entirely destroyed and the building gutted. The five-story building occupied by Miller & Coat, wholesale dry goods, and Skinner, Le Blanc & Co., millinery, was practically burned, and the stocks almost ruined by smoke and water. The second fire occurred at 6 o'clock this morning at Hamilton's saw mill, which was totally destroyed, and two tenements badly damaged. The loss on the mill is $30,000, and on the tenements, $8,000.

Car Works Burned.

Laconia, N. H., June 4.—At 3 o'clock this morning fire broke out in the paint shop of the Laconia car works and destroyed $100,000 worth of property. The paint shop, the foundry, the erecting shop, two of the company's tenements, storehouse and stables, all were rapidly razed by the flames. After practically wiping out the first plant, the fire attacked the refrigerator buildings of Swifts, leveling them and entailing a loss of $11,000; insurance, $5,000. The tenement houses owned by O. A. Atkinson of Boston, were also burned; loss $5,000. The tenants lost everything. The car company's loss is set by President Putnam at $80,000; insurance, $40,500. The fire is thought to have been of incendiary origin.

Say They Were Abused.

Chicago, June 4.—The city health department and the officers were roundly scored yesterday afternoon at an indignation meeting held by Bohemian citizens to protest to the authorities against alleged brutal and inhuman treatment of citizens by health officers sent out to vaccinate people, fumigate houses where smallpox patients or suspects are found and to otherwise assist in stamping out the epidemic. Representatives of the health department present at the meeting will investigate the alleged abuses.

Too Much Bad Whisky.

Black River Falls, Wis., June 4.—Ole P. Thompson, near Halcyon, attempted suicide last night by hanging, but was cut down by his wife and has been under guard since, as he desires to die. Poor whisky is the cause.

The Minnie's Trial.

Washington, June 4. — Mr. Cramp states that the preliminary builders' trial of the triple screw cruiser Minneapolis will take place this week. The course will probably be about ten miles long, off the five-fathoms bank.
